BRADFORD WASHBURN EXPLORES McKINLEY

WITH HIS POLAROID LAND CAMERA

Washburn used a Polaroid Yellow Filter with shutter set at #5 to get this brilliant result from new Type 41 Polaroid black-and-white film. The day was cold and bright — an equivalent background reading of Weston 800-1000.

Bradford Washburn's pictures have made McKinley one of the world's best-photographed mountains. On this year's ascent, he took a Polaroid Camera to record a new route up the 20,270-foot Alaskan peak.

According to Washburn, the Polaroid picture-in-a-minute Camera was "indispensable to the success of our high-altitude survey work, enabling the survey party to identify twice as many control points as ever before." And it operated perfectly under tough conditions.

You don't have to be an explorer to share in the exciting adventure of picture-in-a-minute photography. It's so simple to achieve new effects, to get better results, to open a whole new world of picture possibilities, when you can check your work right on the spot! and — you get the added thrill of seeing your pictures as you take them. Polaroid prints make fine enlargements, too. Extra copies and negatives are easy — and inexpensive.

Whether you're an old hand or a beginner, ask your photo dealer for a demonstration of the Polaroid Land Camera. You'll wonder why you ever waited.

POLAROID ACCESSORIES: flash gun, battery type #200, $11.95; filter kit, $6.84; close-up kit, $10.29; master compartment case, $29.75; special G. E. exposure meter, $15.75.

For complete versatility in the darkroom

. . . a complete line of special-purpose chemicals from Ansco's famous laboratories. No darkroom is up to date without them!

Whatever the quality of the original exposure, the nature of the subject, or the conditions under which the shot was taken, Ansco chemicals afford maximum scope for your personal artistry as expressed in the finished print.

Here are five different chemical preparations that belong on every darkroom shelf.

Want it COLD and sparkling?

Use ANSCO VIVIDOL Paper Developer

Get brilliant highlights contrasting with deep, neutral black image tones. (For best results, use Ansco Cykora or Convira papers.)

Want it WARM and rich?

Use ANSCO ARDOL Paper Developer

Particularly desirable for rich, warm toned portrait prints. (Recommended papers: Ansco Indiatone and Cykora.)

Want to REDUCE density?

Use ANSCO Reducer

Either for special, "trick" effects, or to reduce excessive density of negatives that have been overexposed or overdeveloped, or both.

Want to INCREASE density?

Use ANSCO Mercury Intensifier

It helps you get the best possible prints from weak, underdeveloped negatives. Ansco also supplies a packaged Copper Intensifier.

Want to VARY density?

Use ANSCO New Coccine

Heighten the density of local areas in the negative, leaving the rest as is, or after over-all treatment with Ansco Reducer.

Get these chemical preparations from your Ansco dealer. He will also furnish you with information about the many other Ansco products available to help you make better pictures.

THE PRESIDENT REPORTS . . .

The highest compliments and commendation to the officers and members of COLOR DIVISION for a most praiseworthy accomplishment!

Two or three years ago, they saw the possibilities in stereo photography as a potent area of photographic interest. With finest forethought, they went to work at a time when few others had any great faith in the rebirth of this old kind of camera work. They laid out a program for both immediate activity and long-range value, and they implemented that program efficiently and well.

Today the infant they found on the doorstep and took in as a beloved foundling has reached the point where it can stand alone. Its training, its health, and its basic and vital strength are firm: thanks to CD it can now begin to make its own way in a world that seems to demand a good start for its new citizens.

Accordingly, the Board of Directors have voted to establish a new Stereo Division. We all extend an enthusiastic welcome to SD! And PSA extends an equally warm welcome to all photographers who are interested in this most realistic of all kinds of photography!

A new Division requires much from many—something from all of us. Every PSA member who would like to have a part in making the new SD important to American photography is most cordially invited to "get into the act" by writing Dr. Frank E. Rice, 307 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago 1, Ill., the SD Chairman. I hear he is establishing a "Founders' Group" which will be limited to the first 100 or so who join SD. I—most selfishly—took advantage of the advance information and sent in my dollar for SD membership.

Spee Wright, Chairman of the Membership Committee, is working with Dr. Rice on his end of SD, and so are many of the members of CD who will remain as foster-parents of the new child they have so proudly raised. When you join SD or suggest to a stereo worker that he should join PSA and SD, keep in mind both the great potentialities of stereo and all that every PSA member owes to COLOR for what they have done for Photography and PSA in giving our youngest Division its grand start.

If you'd like an active part in SD, drop a line to Frank Rice and ask for a job. There is plenty to do.

A Convention Echo

After the Detroit Convention, I wrote the Honorable G. Mennen Williams, Governor of the State of Michigan, thanking him for honoring us with his presence at the Honors Dinner and apologizing for the intrusion of politics in the dinner speeches.

His answer, forgiving us completely for everything, is a masterpiece. I only regret that it cannot be reproduced for all of us to read and enjoy.

Why Not?

How much do you get out of PSA—or your membership in a club or a business association—or your camera, for that matter?

None of them does you much good unless you make use of it. You can—maybe—enjoy owning a nice camera sitting up there on the shelf; you can attend meetings and listen to speakers; you can read PSA JOURNAL and the Division publications; but you won't ever get what you want until you make use of what any one of these grand things offers.

You won't really enjoy and benefit from your PSA membership until you are really a part of the organization—until it becomes your own association, because you are having a share in carrying on its work and helping to build its future.

Make use of the services offered by your Division or the Society—certainly for all of them are valuable and helpful—but then increase what PSA can do for you by doing as much as you can for and in PSA. Your fun begins when you start working with your fellow-members on one or more committees.

Why not pick your spot and volunteer now?

NORRIS HARKNESS

take it easy—WITH STEREO-Realist

TAKE WHAT YOU SEE...THEN SEE EXACTLY WHAT YOU TAKE

THERE are many reasons why it's easy to take beautiful, full-color pictures in thrilling third dimension with the REALIST — the biggest thing in present-day photography. If a scene is pleasing to your eyes, snap it. When you see the stereo slide in your REALIST Viewer, the picture will be equally pleasing because REALIST pictures are exact duplicates of the original scene . . . with true-to-life depth and in natural color.

It's as simple as that. No fussing about perspective or composition . . . no juggling of equipment. Just take what you see . . . then see exactly what you take!

Complete novices can take good pictures with the REALIST from the very first roll of film. Experts find it a new thrill. For in third dimension people are so lifelike you almost expect them to speak . . . flowers so real you can almost smell their fragrance . . . scenic views indescribable in their grandeur. If you haven't seen REALIST pictures, ask your dealer to show you some. Prove to yourself that you, too, can "take it easy" with the REALIST. NEW AIDS FOR BETTER PICTURE-MAKING

JACOB DESCHIN, APSA

Every once in a while somebody starts counting camera heads around the country and the result is a new figure on the extent to which photography has gripped the citizenry of these United States. The latest comes from a new survey, this time by Frank W. Mansfield, sales research director for Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., the results of which were released at a cozy breakfast meeting in New York recently. Basing his findings on an intensive house-to-house canvas and casual questioning in the streets of towns and cities across the country, Mr. Mansfield and his assistants found that seventy percent of all American households today have a camera.

To point up his findings and to see how they stack up with other things American folks believe to be worth while, he compared the figure with those for other conveniences. He found that the figure was about the same for owners of automobiles. Seventy-five percent of the households have a bathtub, it was learned; sixty-three percent a telephone, and eighty percent a mechanical refrigerator. The 32,000,000 of the 43,500,000 total households in the United States that owned or used a camera during 1950, when the survey was made, had at their disposal almost 52,000,000 cameras, Mr. Mansfield said.

Reporting specifically on the use of flash by amateurs, the researcher said he learned that eighty per cent of those questioned said they had been using flash less than four years, indicating that most of the progress in this direction has been made in this short period. In the two-year period in question—1948-1950—the total number of flash pictures taken jumped from 117,800,000 in 1948 to 230,000,000 in 1950. At this rate, Mr. Mansfield made bold to predict, the annual consumption of flash lamps will rise to somewhere between 490,000,000 and 730,000,000 by 1955.

Three factors appear to be mainly responsible for this phenomenal growth: the introduction of inexpensive flash-synchronized cameras, which now total about 8,000,000 costing under $20; the fact that eighty per cent of all cameras in use today are equipped with flash guns; and the growing use of flash cameras in the home by women.

It will be "some months", the man says, before you'll see it, but that 3,000 ASA film you've been hearing about is really a fact. I refer, of course, to Dr. Edwin H. Land's announcement at the American Institute of Physics convention in Chicago a few months ago. On that occasion, he disclosed that the Polaroid picture-in-a-minute film can be made considerably faster by employing a new speed-up effect. But the secret is in the process, rather than in the film. To prove his point, he showed his audience a snapshot of a group listening to an address in the Chicago Civic Opera House. It was demonstrated again, though without fanfare, by Polaroid's Richard T. Kriebel at the U. S. Camera Achievement Awards dinner in Rochester recently. An exposure of f/5.6 at 1/25th by the ordinary lighting at the festivities produced a picture, after the usual minute, that was actually overexposed! The job could have been achieved at f/8 and maybe a little smaller stop. Sample, Dick? Sorry, bub, not yet. It's all for the Army for a while.

Got a product idea you think would bowl them over if you could only get someone to back it? Well, here's your chance, but it's gotta be good. Brown-Forman Distillers Corporation recently formed Brown-Forman Industries, a division initially started to encourage the company's employees to develop new products but now ready to welcome ideas to individuals outside the company as well.

The first products to be sponsored by the division in the photographic field have just been announced. They are a print flattening solution, BFI No. 20 and a hypo neutralizer, BFI No. 30. The first is said by the manufacturer to be an excellent reconditioner for old, damaged or brittle prints, and to provide an excellent base for retouching and tinting. Other advantages claimed for the new flattener are: retention and maintenance of moisture inherent in the print; penetration of the paper support of the print and lubrication of fibres; prevents whites from yellowing and blacks from becoming brown; imparts a high gloss to glossy papers, and facilitates drying. The hypo neutralizer will, according to the makers: neutralize the silver thiosulfate; has stability and long life in an open tray; requires no after-treatment to correct the degradation of the print's tones, and will not cause sticking to drum driers.

The Imp, a five-ounce 35mm camera with a "built-in" mailing service, was recently placed on the market by Beaurline Industries, St. Paul, Minn. The plastic camera, which costs $1.79, comes already loaded to take twelve pictures. When all the exposures have been made, the carton-covered camera is addressed to the manufacturer and a six-cent stamp attached. The maker develops the film and returns twelve enlargements 3¼x3¼ inches. The camera has a fixed-fous lens, one shutter speed, is simple to use and is said to give sharp pictures from four feet to infinity. To take more pictures, one simply buys another Imp camera and repeats the procedure.

A camera that comes in a choice of colors has been imported from Italy by G. A. Buttafarri, 207 Fourth Avenue, New York. The camera is the Rondine, which costs $17.50 with carrying case, and the maker is the Ferrania Company, of Italy. It is available with colored leather covering of the following colors: brown, green, blue and red, as well as black. The leather carrying case and carrying strap are in shades matching the color of the camera. Without case, the camera is $14.50.

The Rectaflex Junior, younger version of the 35mm miniature Italian-made Rectaflex, has been introduced by the importer, Director Products, Inc., 570 Fifth Avenue, New York. The Junior has eye-level, ground-glass focusing; shutter speeds from 1 second to 1/500th; is synchronized at all speeds for flash and speedlight; features helical focusing and is available with a variety of lenses. You can buy the Rectaflex Junior with either a Beta f/3.5, an Angenieux f/2.9 or a Schneider Xenon f/2 coated lens, at $189.50 to $219.50, depending on the lens. A complete line of accessory items are also available.

Ansco has announced a new surface, Brilliant, for its line of Indiatone projection papers. The new surface is a double-weight paper combining the old "crystal" surface with the finely grained surface of such a paper as Kashmir, producing a high surface lustre with a pattern fine enough for making prints as small as 4x5 inches without appreciable loss of detail.

A handy and handsome little wallet, the "Personal Photo Album", a pocket picture wallet covered with simulated alligator and designed to accommodate twelve 2½x3½-inch prints and an identification card, has been placed on the market at 59 cents by Lion Specialties Co., 7518 Thirteenth Ave., Brooklyn 28, N. Y. Looks like a good buy for the money.

Enteco Industries, Inc., 610 Kosciusko Street, Brooklyn 21, N. Y., have added to their fast growing line of camera attachments, a matched set of "close-up" lenses for the Stereo-Realist camera. Each set of two lenses is mounted in duraluminum mounts and are packaged in suede type wallets. Instructions for the $5.50 set include data charts of subject distances and focusing scales. A set of two lens hoods for the Stereo-Realist that fit over the closeup lenses is also available, at $3.20.

The same company now has lens attachments for two new lenses of the new model VX Kine-Exakta 35mm single-lens reflex camera. For the camera with the Biotar f/2 in preset diaphragm, Enteco has a combination lens hood and filter holder that screws into the lens mount. The price is $8. For the new Tessar f/2.8 in preset diaphragm Enteco has an adapter ring of the screw-in type that sells for $2.40. The lens hood is $2.

Heitz and Lightburn, 150 West Fifty-fourth Street, New York 19, importers of the Alpa Reflex 35mm cameras, announce new, lower prices, as follows: Alpa Reflex with Alfinon 5cm f/2.8 lens, $259; Alpa Reflex, with Alitar 5cm f/1.8 lens, $357; Alpa Prisma Reflex, with Alfinon, $329; Alpa Prisma Reflex, with the Alitar, $427. Most Alpa lenses, from 3.5cm to 200cm, are also 5 to 10 per cent cheaper now. The company has a new adapter ring, $3.15, for eyeglass-wearing photographers to permit easier focusing. The ring, the Montur, allows one to attach a corrected lens to the built-in Kern prism of the Alpa Prisma Reflex.

Sojourning in Detroit for the 1951 PSA Convention, your columnist ran into Ed Farber, of Strobo Research, Milwaukee, Wisc., who described a new Strobo Research Monostrob, the price of which was not then known. The new product is called a three-in-one flash unit: basically it is a six-inch-deep by seven-inch-diameter self-contained unit for general work. In addition, it has a small accessory Shorty Snoot that provides a modeling light and soft light source, and permits the use of a 16-inch reflector for studio work. This reflector is equipped with a Holophane Diffuser-Refractor and Modeling Light, and light control lunes permit even more control. The new Monostrob weighs five pounds and "packs a 110-watt-second punch."

Back in New York City, we found that a mound of miscellaneous news had piled up, to wit:

Bell & Howell announced its new Model 200 (single lens) and 200-T (two-lens turret) 16mm magazine load motion picture cameras, adding that the cameras because of their beautiful design had won the Society of Motion Picture Art Directors' Award for 1952. Both cameras have positive viewfinders; a film plane mark engraved on the side of the camera housing for accurate closeups; film winding like a watch; 12½-foot film run; ASA built-in exposure guide; three-position starting button, for normal operation, continuous running, and single-frame exposures; five operating speeds, 16, 24, 32, 48 and 64 frames per second; easy conversion from single-lens to turret model. With a 1-inch f/2.5 coated lens the Model 200 is $189.95; with the same lens, the turret model is $234.95. The new cameras have a dove grey finish and chrome trim.

At the same time, the company announced a new 134W 8mm motion picture camera at $79.95 (film-spool type, drop-in loading) equipped with a ½-inch f/2.5 Comat lens. It also called attention to cuts in the prices of the 134TA (tri-lens 8mm) to $129.95, and the 134V single-lens 8mm to $89.95, both equipped with a ½-inch f/2.5 lens.

Bausch & Lomb, Rochester, N. Y., has a new compact, lightweight 60mm telescope that, the company states, "provides a clearer, more brilliant image than previous models." Only 16½ inches long, less than half that of former three and four-foot models, the multi-purpose telescope may be used for amateur astronomy, bird watching, sports events, as a spotting scope on the rifle range, or for general observation. The price is $95 compared to over $200 for the old-style 60mm model. Four eyepieces of varying power, 15, 20, 30 and 60, are available. The unit weighs 48 ounces. With an adapter, the scope can be mounted on any camera tripod.

Our Cover

Our cover this month was selected from the Pictorial Section of the 1951 PSA Exhibition which hung in the Detroit Institute of Arts from October 9 through November 4.

Mr. Challiss Gore, of Orinda, California is a member of the Berkeley Camera Club. He has recently joined the Berkeley Portfolian Club of which Boris Dobro is the sponsor.

"Neighbor" was the print of the year in the Berkeley Camera Club Annual competition judged by K. V. Arntzen, APSA, FRPS, a member of the PSA Board of Directors. It won a second prize in The Camera magazine's print of the year contest. It also received honorable mention in the 1951 exhibit of the Northern California Council of Camera Clubs and was hung in the Pittsburgh and Detroit salons.

As to the story behind the picture, Mr. Gore has this to say:

"I found Ed Green, the model, at a very picturesque 100-year old place called Old Mountain Ranch in California's Mother Lode country, on a field trip two or three years ago. As usual, upon getting back to my darkroom and viewing the results, I laid plans for a return trip, feeling that I could do better with the material than I had done. Last year I made the return trip, and was greeted by Ed at the gate. His natural pose is the one you see in the picture. I shot a lot of other negatives, but none measured up to the first one. Ed is an old buckaroo who used to work for Miller & Lux, fabled cattle kings of California in days gone by."

Ansco Color 8mm and 16mm motion picture film. The new station is geared to process these films within 24 to 48 hours of their arrival. Sheet, roll and 35mm magazine color film will continue to be processed in Binghamton.

A new model of the automatic Sixtomat photoelectric exposure meter, the Sixtomat-I, has been imported by the Mitropa Corp., 50 Broadway, New York. It reads incident and reflected light, has a body of white plastic with chrome trim and is calibrated in ASA exposure indexes. The price is $32.50.

A Model No. 250 Twin-Surface Print Dryer at $17.95 has been placed on the market by Fedco Products, Inc., 37 Murray Street, New York. The dryer takes four 8 x 10 prints. The twin surfaces measure 11½ x 17½ inches, each consuming 125 watts. For AC or DC.

A new Syncro-Mite Reflex Flash Unit at $13.75 is announced by Heiland Research Corp., of Denver, Colo. The unit is designed for use with midget flash lamps on Rolleiflex, Rolleicord, Ciroflex, Kodak Reflex and most other reflex cameras having built-in flash contacts.

New literature:

A revised fifth edition of the Data Book "Kodak Films" (35 cents) has been published by Eastman Kodak.

Five new booklets have just been published by Eastman Kodak Company. "Photographic Greeting Cards" (25 cents), a 24-page booklet on the subject for amateurs who want to make their own, describes and illustrates the techniques involved. "Darkroom Construction for Professional, Photomechanical and Industrial Use" (35 cents) contains 33 pages, illustrated with photographs, charts and drawings, on general principles and detailed plans. "Professional Printing with Kodak Photographic Papers" (50 cents) is a revised edition which in addition to describing the special characteristics of Kodak papers provides a compact manual on printing for advanced workers. Two other new editions recently published are for the Kodak Color Data Book series, "Color Separation and Masking" and "Kodak Dye Transfer Process", each 56 pages long and each costing 50 cents. The first, illustrated with black-and-white and color photographs, diagrams and charts, describes the procedures of making masks and balanced color-separation negatives from positive color transparencies or directly from the subject. The second is believed to be the first really complete coverage of print making by this process.

STEREO

DON BENNETT

We had a pleasant surprise when we opened the November PSA JOURNAL and saw the name of Jack Norling at the head of a very interesting article on stereo. Odd that we should have mentioned his name in the December column, written before receipt of the November issue. Jack Norling has been a motion picture producer for years. Being a gadgeteer at heart, he has always tended towards the types of movie work that require more than the ordinary amount of brain power. He delved into animation, optical printing and stereo. He built one of the first autofocus animation cameras that worked. A quiet sort of guy who doesn't talk much, but says plenty when he does open up, Jack has a good engineering background that makes him go into a subject thoroughly. His humor is quiet, too. We remember when he was describing his autofocus camera before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers years ago. After going into all the intricacies of design, how the cam changed the focal distance as the camera was moved up and down on its track, he told how the shape of the cam was computed by using familiar formulas. Then he quietly capped it by saying something like: "Of course, the lens didn't fit our computations so we tested and filed until the image was sharp throughout the travel."

His humor showed up too, in the Plymouth film we mentioned last month, the one shown at the New York World's Fair. Most of the audience ducked when a fender got out of control and came right off the screen headed for the looker! It was just Jack playing with the lenses to get the object to appear in front of the stereo window.

That film was quite a job to make. In addition to being in stereo, every frame was photographed individually! The whole film was "stop motion". After each frame was exposed one part or a hundred were moved a fraction of an inch and the next frame was exposed. In some of the more difficult levitation sequences, where parts moved through the air, the making of one second's time on the screen could take an hour or more. Surely a job calling for a great deal of patience.

If you are reading Jack's article, you can see that he is the thorough type of individual who can tackle such a job and carry it through to a successful conclusion. The long lines who waited to see his film in 1939 and 1940 attest its success.

We mentioned the depolarizing effects of thin plastic sections last month. Forgot to include that not all thin plastic sections depolarize. It depends on the type of material. Cellophane is a bad offender but some of the acetates have no effect. In some cases it is necessary to cut on a bias grain so that when the sheet is folded, V-fashion, the effect is canceled, just as crossed polaroids cancel light.

However, we can't get too excited right now about stereo projection. We believe it will come, but until stereo projectors can be built for the mass market, we aren't excited about paving the way.

Clubs and wealthy addicts can afford stereo projection today, but for the other 99%, let's wait and see. In the meantime don't worry too much about the effects of mounting unless you belong to a club with a projector, or have a bank account that can afford one.

Much more important, to our way of thinking, is the matter of correct mounting. Almost any type of stereo mounting is good enough for viewing. Only ordinary care is needed. If you have little chance of projecting your stereos, just do the best job you can.

If you are able to use a projector, then you must drill yourself to do a superior mounting job. Most important factors are correct spacing and perfect alignment on the baseline . . . no tilts. You can prove this even with a viewer! Slip a slide into your viewer and tilt it even one-sixteenth of an inch. Zowie! No stereo. Consider what happens when that is projected onto a 50-inch screen. Fifty diameters magnification. That sixteenth becomes three inches. Now go the other way . . . a sixteenth of an inch is 62 one-thousandths . . . and 62 divided by 50 is 1.1 thousandths, roughly. It is easy to see why your slides must be aligned to the thousandth for projection. Most projectors, of course, have a tilting adjustment to take care of misalignments, but it is possible to mount so accurately that the adjustments need not be touched at all during a projection session.

Julius Kaiser had a good article on level cameras in a recent issue of Modern Photography. He proves his point quite well and his suggestion about fastening a level to your camera should not be taken too lightly. You can get away with it for hand viewing, but projection will emphasize your faults.

Lots of club activity in stereo. Are we wrong in saying that the New York Stereo Society is the oldest? It was chartered in 1946. Interests are not limited to 35mm stereo and it includes many addicts among its members, men who have been around stereo for a good many years. Information from Owen K. Taylor, 40 Monroe St., New York 2, N. Y. Dues are $3. Meetings last Friday of each month.

Dayton, Ohio, has a club. Membership about 40, dues $5. Many of the members are attached to Wright Field. Salem Camera Shop can give you information about this club.

Milwaukee club meets first Wednesday each month. Dues are $3 and you get information from Mrs. Harold F. Icke, 2833-A N. 9th St., phone LOcust 2-7817.

Hollywood club is quite active, holding frequent contests. Harold Lloyd is active head of the group. Many of the members are familiar to movie-goers.

To get listed here, just let us know the pertinent facts about your stereo club or stereo section. Report on your news and future plans, but see our December column for dates. We must know about it long before it happens, two months before. Address me at 28 Leonard St., Stamford, Conn.

Calling Oil Colorists

JAMES H. ARCHIBALD

THE COLORING of photographic prints with photo oil colors is a fascinating and profitable hobby. To take a black and white print, and endow it with the glowing beauty of harmonious color is not difficult. Excellent work has been done by students whose only equipment was a sincere desire to produce something that expressed their unrealized talents in a material way. Artistic ability is less useful than a serious determination to master the rules of color harmony.

How, then, can the embryonic colorist develop his — or her — ability to produce pleasing and acceptable hand colored prints? Is it a matter of color knowledge, better tools, a certain type of print paper, or a keener craftsmanship? Frankly, all these are important, but an understanding of color harmony is by far the most helpful. You may have excellent technique, the right paper, good tools, etc., but if your colors are out of tune, then all else is nullified.

Suppose, then, that we enumerate what might be called "The Significant Seven" points in the order of their importance, and elaborate upon them. Here they are:

Understanding of color harmony
The right paper
Print quality
Tools and touch
Print tone
Paints
Models

Color Harmony

When this is attained through mastery of the simple fundamentals of color, it is more productive of good results than intuition. The former says, "I know," and the latter, "I think."

The aspiring photo colorist should make a hue circle similar to Fig. 1. This should be drawn on a white matte photographic paper with India ink, and the ten segments filled in with those photo oil colors best calculated to produce a smoothly balanced hue circle. The initials used in the drawing are self-explanatory. R denotes red; YR yellow red; Y yellow; GY green yellow; G green; BG blue green; B blue; PB purple blue; P purple, and RP red purple. Most photo color manufacturers market kits containing hues similar to those noted above. Before filling in the color segments, arrange your ten colors in sequence on a strip of white matte print paper so you can properly evaluate them for Hue, Value, and Chroma. In color parlance, these are the three dimensions of Color. Hue denotes the color family; Value the depth or lightness, and Chroma the degree of purity or greyness.

Hue Circle

In making the hue circle, note the shaded center part. This should be marked off on stiff grey cardboard and attached to the circle so it can rotate, thereby providing the tyro with an automatic device that instantly arranges analogous and complementary harmonies, combined or separate. Set C to any dot and the hues included from A to A give analogous harmony, while those hues opposite C show complementary harmony. A combination of both is the most pleasing, and Fig. 1 shows RP, R, and YR, complemented by BG, a grouping of hues that is perfectly harmonious—and scientifically correct.

In the coloring of scenes from Nature it is well to remember that she is the superlative colorist upon whose palette is never found a discordant color nuance. Anyone who has shot color extensively and viewed it on the beaded screen must admit this as they evaluate the perfect harmonies in all their glory.

Most beginners in scenic colorings commit errors that are based upon their inherited misconceptions of color. Grass is green, so they reach for a tube of color marked green, but what a green! The sky is blue, so in goes a glaring purple blue, and when a brick-red farm house shows up, it has been colored with vermillion or scarlet. So it would be useless to suggest how to match grass, sky, and bricks, but here is a better idea, which if followed, will help to simplify and beautify scenic color work: Keep your skies a soft violet blue; the grass and foliage a yellowish green; all red objects an orange red, and use raw sienna instead of yellow for the tans and golds.

However, it is in the realm of portraiture that the automatic hue circle will prove its worth, for here we have complete control over the color harmony which best suits the colorist. Average flesh tone is of the orange-red family, and its complement, blue-green or even olive-green, is perfect for a background to enhance the human complexion. However, like all backgrounds, it must be kept soft and neutral in chroma. This arrangement takes care of complementary harmony, and according to the hue circle, we still have available tones of red, orange, and yellow, which could be used in the subject's clothing.

Naturally, when discussing color harmony, it is necessary to use a common nomenclature and limit color names to those mentioned in the hue circle. To those well versed in color, the primary, or fundamental, hues are looked upon as the Adam and Eve of Colordom, from whence millions of related hues, values, and chromas emanate. For this reason the beginner in color must develop an ability to 'see' color everywhere and be increasingly able to classify the related hues that surround him in daily life.

To illustrate this more clearly, suppose we give a few examples. Rose, ruby, maroon, and pink are in the red family; baby blue, Chinese blue, sky blue and navy are in the blue family; peach, ivory, ecru, brown, buff, are closely related to the orange family.

Returning to the use of the automatic hue circle in portraiture or still life studies, it should be pointed out that a slavish adherence to its principles is not recommended. Instead, we shall offer a formula: The largest areas of color should be in related hues embraced from A to A, and enhanced by their complementary at C.

Of course, it is necessary to point out that the colors in the tubes undergo quite a change once they are worked into the print and smoothed off. When applied to a grey print, the cool colors such as violet, blue, and green are less affected than the warmer hues, and when the print is sepia toned the reverse is true. Always remember that your final color tone is a combination of the print tone and the hue worked over it, and be specially careful to preserve the modeling in the print as too much heavy color will obscure the nice play of light and shade.

The Right Paper

To attempt a coloring on a glossy print is a waste of time and materials. The surface of your photographic print should be matte, for matte has an affinity for photo oil color. There are many excellent matte papers available, but for reasons of space economy we list but three: Kodak Opal G, Ansco Cycora, and Defender Velour Black.

Print Quality

We cannot over-emphasize the importance of print quality, for color applied to a dim or fuzzy print only increases the obscuration of the detail and modeling. Avoid prints with extremes of light and dark areas, and favor those that are crisp, sparkling, and show a nice stepping from highlight to shadow.

Tools and Touch

Tools with which to apply color to the print are simple and inexpensive. The principal requirements are a box of round shaped toothpicks, half a dozen orange sticks or wooden skewers, and a supply of the better surgical cotton-wool. To make the average sized tool, shred out a thin piece of cotton-wool about three quarters by one inch, and lay it on the left forefinger and thumb. Now place a damp toothpick on the pad as illustrated in Fig. 2,

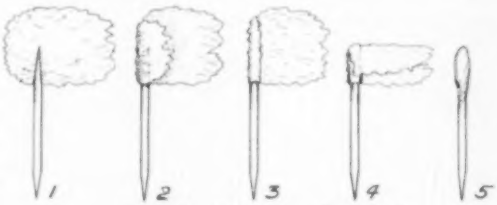

Fig. 2. Making the Tool.

1, fold the pad over the toothpick, see # 2, and roll firmly to the right a bit, see # 3. Lap the upper part of the pad downward, and continue rolling the toothpick to the right, see # 4. This will give you a tool similar to that shown in # 5.

For larger sized applicators, Fig. 3 C, increase the size of the cotton-wool pad, and for very fine tools reduce the cotton to a mere wisp. Practice making the tools until you are fairly expert, and see to it that they are neatly and firmly made. For large backgrounds and other masses, the colors can be applied with swabs as shown in Fig. 3, D and E. These are made by twisting short rope-like lengths of cotton and then kinking them into a pad. It is advisable to slightly blunt the points of the toothpicks and skewers before making the tools, as this obviates the danger of scoring the print.

A palette on which to mix your colors can be made from a piece of window glass, size about five by seven inches. Mark off a piece of white cardboard as shown in Fig. 3, F, and attach to the back of glass with Scotch tape. Colors are squeezed onto the squares and mixed on the main part of the palette. A wooden hand rest, see G, is very useful as it allows the colorist to color his print without smearing those parts already worked on. It should be of hard wood, about twelve by one and one half, by one quarter inches, to which are attached end pieces one quarter inch high. Finally, have a roll of masking tape on hand with which to attach the print to a piece of heavy cardboard, as this keeps the print flat and easy to work on.

As for "touch," or technique, the rudiments of applying the color can be stated quite simply. Rub — don't scrub — the colors in with the right sized tool or swab, and smooth off excess paint with a feathery, circular motion. Avoid the slightest trace of blotchiness, and see to it that none of the nice modeling — or detail — in the print is obscured by too much paint. Remember, if you apply your paint too generously, most of it will eventually have to be removed when you smooth off with a swab.

Print Tone

If your subject is generally cool, such as winter or summer landscapes and seascapes, use a grey print, but if you hope to impart warmth and glow into a fall scene, or portray living flesh tone in portraits, you must have a warm — or sepia — print.

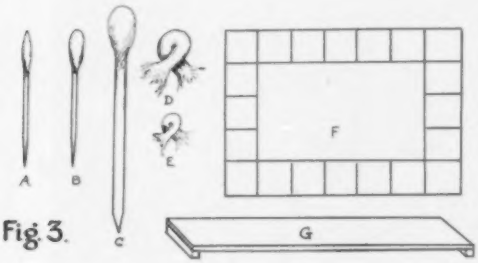

Fig. 3.

The Paints

The first requirement in a photo oil color is, that it be intense and full bodied. One manufacturer features color kits with each color marked Lip, Cheek, Tree Green, Sky Blue, etc. For the beginner this might be an excellent idea, but it necessitates having many colors on your palette. It is the writer's measured opinion that the sincere colorist will more quickly learn the fundamentals of color mixing if he confines the palette to the ten colors in the hue circle described, and four or five special colors for flesh tones. Kodak Flesh is especially good for women and children, while Marshall's is equally good for masculine portraiture. In procuring your photo oil colors, make your choice from products that have enjoyed popularity and prominence.

Models

An artist would never dream of painting a scene or a portrait from memory. Neither should the photo colorist. Compile a portfolio of colored pages from slick periodicals such as the National Geographic, that show landscapes, seascapes, rocks, clouds, sunsets, etc., and portraits of all kinds. Use these as models for your colorings, and dispense with the dubious advantage of color harmonies made "out of one's head."

There you have an outline of the "Significant Seven." To have included a dissertation on how to make certain colors and how to apply them, however, would entail considerable detail and a measure of confusion as the various companies who market photo oil color kits use different colors and color terminology. For this reason, then, we suggest reading and studying the instructions enclosed with the kits, most of which are simple, interesting, and decidedly helpful. Too, for those who wish to further their proficiency in this self-expressive hobby, there are manuals and literature available at any good photographic supply store.

Coloring with photo oil paints is an exciting and educational hobby. The medium is unusually flexible and productive of extremely smooth results, and, it is amazingly economical.

Johnny Appleseed's Correspondence

Dear Mr. Appleseed:

It has become my job to take black and white pictures of various events in a local church and to make them into slides for projection. Since I have never made slides I was wondering if you would be kind enough to tell me something of the procedure.

The camera which I plan to use is a 4 x 5 Speed Graphic, and these negatives would have to be reduced to approximately 1 x 1¼.

Your help is greatly appreciated.

Edna J. Schneider

Dear Miss Schneider:

There are two relatively easy ways to take care of your problem: you can either make a paper print and copy it, or you can illuminate your negative from the rear and rephotograph it in the desired size. Let me tell you more about each of these methods.

Depending upon the equipment you have available, you may find this the easier method of the two. Make a black-and-white print on glossy or some smooth-surface paper stock. This print should be normal to slightly below usual contrast, definitely not contrasty. Mount the print to hold it rigidly, illuminate it evenly to avoid reflection (this means the light must hit the print from the side) and rephotograph on a film that will give a positive image directly. This means that you should use one of the black-and-white reversal films that are available in 35mm width or you can use Kodachrome, Ansco Color, or Ektachrome. I have used Kodachrome very successfully. As a matter of fact, PSA has available for loan through the Pictorial Division a set of Kodachrome slides made of famous black-and-white prints by this method.

Another alternative is to fix up an illumination box on which you can place your negative for camera copying, using conventional black-and-white film materials. You can make such a box by coating the interior with dull white paint and then by mounting two or three light bulbs inside the box and placing a piece of diffusing glass on one side. Tape your negative to the glass, cut off all extraneous light by using a black paper of the type packaged with sheet films, and rephotograph the negative in a room of low illumination. For your negative material on which the new positive will be made, you can use a fine-grain film, and your development should be with a fine-grain developer like D-76 or Microdol. Depending upon the contrast in your original negative, the film you use, and the developer, you will find it necessary to alter your development times from the standard recommendations. I suggest that you start with half the usual time.

Both of these procedures call for making the final copy in a camera for which the field is definitely known. This means that you should use a view camera, if possible, and that you may wish to employ a 35mm adapter back of the type described in Column No. 18, page 457, of the July 1951 Journal.

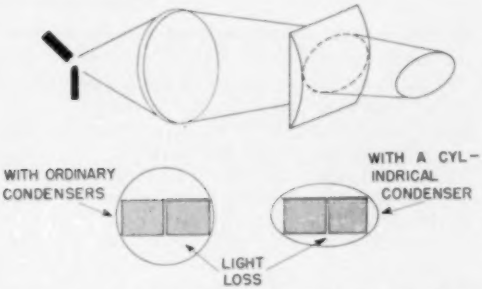
Dual Images on One Film

Systems for stereoscopic films using dual images side by side or one above the other have also been proposed. One of the problems in the two-image arrangement, whether in tandem or side by side, is the loss of light, because the light-covering circle covers a large area around the area occupied by the two images.

The ordinary circular light spot from the projector arc spills light all around the images. This condition can be improved upon by a light condensing system having a cylindrical lens element. Then the light spot becomes oval instead of round.



A light-condensing system that improves the light distribution to dual images.

The Newcomer Anamorphoser

Another method is to introduce an optical device on the camera to compress the images in one direction, and a similar device on the projector to expand them back to normal proportions. Such an optical device is called an "anamorphoser." Several types have been constructed, but it remained for Dr. H. Sidney Newcomer to design one that does not introduce serious aberrations and have other optical handicaps. The Newcomer Anamorphoser is capable of effecting a compression of the image to almost ⅔ and an expansion of almost 1½ times.

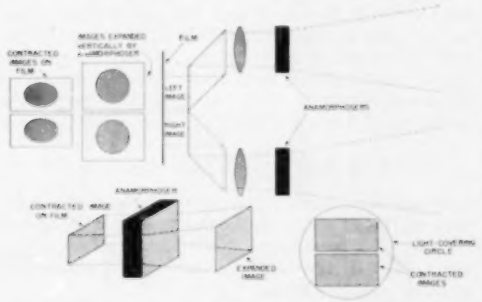


Diagram of the "Anamorphoser" principle applied to motion picture stereoscopy.

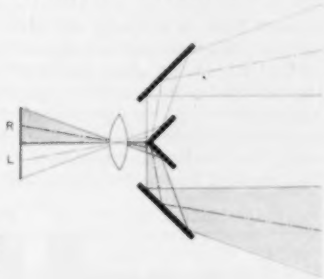

Diagram of one arrangement of the "beam splitter."

The Beam Splitter

Among the methods suggested for the employment of a single film to carry the two images is the "beam-splitter" in one form or another. The device has two pairs of mirrors (or prisms) placed in front of the lens and arranged so that the pair on the left will cause the left-eye image to be selected for projection to the screen and the right-hand pair will do the same for the right-eye image. It is a simple device and easy to use.

The beam-splitter is a device that does exactly what its name implies; it splits the light beam into two parts. Hence, the intensity of each part cannot be greater than half of the whole beam. But in addition to light loss, it has another drawback. The pictures overlap considerably, making it impossible to mask them to a stereoscopic window. The window must be artificially produced by a black border on the screen to absorb spill-over light. Another shortcoming: The camera lens works at something less than half the f/stop setting shown on the lens. This means more than twice the amount of light required for conventional photography. When it comes to shooting interiors, this added light requirement proves to be an economic disadvantage of the beam splitter method. There is a corresponding light loss in projection, and here the loss is even more significant. Take the loss inherent in the beam splitter, add that to the loss in polarization and you find that you're getting about one-twelfth the light that you had when you projected the full frame in the conventional way. Another disadvantage of the ordinary beam-splitter is the picture proportions it gives—a narrow and tall picture, certainly inappropriate for stereoscopic representation which is so well suited for panoramic views.

Another proposed device has dual lenses producing pictures side by side. There is no light loss in the camera, since two lenses are used and the window for each picture is quite sharp. However, there is considerable loss in projection if the attachment is used on a projector not provided with a special condenser system. If the standard proportions are retained, each image is less than one-fourth the area of the full frame.

Another method which has been proposed for simultaneous projection, is the arrangement of images with one member above the other. Special projectors would be required.

Sequential Frame Projection—"Eclipse" System

From time to time, the alternate projection of the members of a stereo pair has also been proposed. In this system, the right eye image, for instance, is projected first, then the shutter interrupts the light beam while the film moves down to position the left eye image. Thus there are periods of flicker that occur at different times for each eye. If we break this sequence of events down, we find that the first light period has a value of 12.5 per cent of the complete picture cycle. The flicker blade on the projector shutter (considering a two-bladed shutter) gives a dark period lasting 12.5 per cent to be followed by a light period of the same, then a long dark period consuming 62.5 per cent for pull-down and eclipse to permit the other eye to see its image. If standard sound-film speed of 24 frames a second is used, the resulting flicker is very annoying. Stepping up the projection to 48 frames a second increases flicker frequency twice, but it still is noticeable. There is a physiological effect that is likely to become disagreeably apparent—usually headache or nausea—after a few minutes of viewing pictures projected in this way. A complete period of darkness for one eye, while light reaches the other, will probably always result in visual fatigue, if not in nausea, no matter how high, within workable limits, the flicker frequency is brought.

Flicker of low frequency calls for traction on the control muscles of the irises when bright light enters one or both eyes. The rapid occurrence of the transmission of stimuli, first from one eye, then from the other, and the motor messages from the brain to the muscles, delivered in rapid sequence, probably accounts, in part, for the visual discomfort experienced by most people when viewing "eclipse" stereo movies.

Perception of flicker depends upon the intensity of the interrupted light, as well as the flicker frequency. The more intense the light, the higher the frequency must go before flicker fusion is attained. Also, the larger the angular field over which flicker is distributed, the greater the consciousness of flicker. Hence the dimmer the picture and the smaller it is, the lower becomes the flicker fusion frequency.

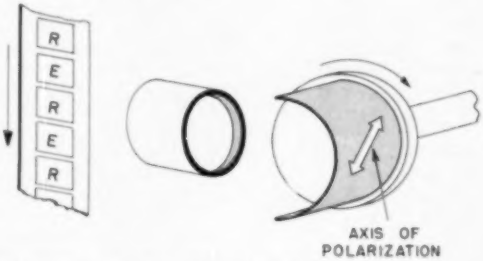

Diagram of the "rotating polarizer" method of alternate frame stereoscopic projection.

There are two ways to project and view eclipse stereograms. One is by using rotating or vibrating shutter devices held up in front of the eyes. These are synchronized electrically with the projector. The other method is to employ a rotating polarizer in front of the projector lens and polarizing spectacles for the viewer. In one position the polarizer delivers light through the left spectacle filter, in the other through the right filter.

Alternate frame, or eclipse, projection should have at least twice the number of frames required for conventional films. That means doubling the length and providing for faster projection speed. If the alternate frames are photographed alternately, there is a very objectionable fringing in pictures of moving objects. This is a cause of eyestrain, especially in a picture where the action seen by one eye is in quite a different stage of progress than the action seen by the other. Difficulty in fusion invariably results. This combination of disturbing effects caused by flickers out of phase between the eyes and by fusion trouble, limits the appreciation of the eclipse method.

Complete visual comfort can be attained in stereo movies only if the two images are projected simultaneously, if they are rock-steady, if they are of equal brightness, if they are of equal contrast, if they are properly aligned vertically and horizontally, if far distant points are not separated too far in one image from that of the other, and if they are of exactly the same size.

Improved Single Film Methods

Several inventions by the author eliminate the draw back of the single-film dual-image arrangement, namely the unequal distribution of light. These methods employ novel optical systems which are accessory attachments to standard projector heads.

If one member of a stereogram has even a slightly different brightness, some eyestrain will result. If the difference is large, the resulting eyestrain will be great. This is because the action of the eyes' iris diaphrams is entirely automatic and not by voluntary control. If strong light falls on one eye, both pupils will contract and the eye seeing the darker image will have its pupil closed down more than it should be properly to see the image. In accommodation too, both eyes act together and it is impossible for one independently to accommodate to a different extent from the other.

Illustrating the distribution of light over a pair of images. Left—as in an arrangement wherein both images have the same position. Right—as in an arrangement wherein one image is "flipped over" in relation to the other.

The improved single film methods satisfy one of the basic requirements for good stereograms, easy to look at, in that both members of the pair are of the same brightness. The illustration shows a pair of pictures having image attitudes in a conventional arrangement. The diagram on the right shows an improved arrangement. It affords the best possible distribution of the light from the projector arc.

The illuminating spot from the arc is considerably more intense in its center than in its outer regions. With images having the attitudes shown in the left side diagram, more light falls at the top of one picture than at the top of the other, resulting in a different level of illumination in an area of one than in the corresponding area of the other. The arrangement shown on the right provides equal illumination in corresponding areas, because all portions of the light spot fall upon the same corresponding areas in each member. This meets the requirement that there be equal brightness for each image in order to attain complete visual comfort. It may seem surprising that the intensity difference between center and edges of the light circle is significant. Actually, in practice, projection engineers are quite happy if there is only a 40 per cent loss,—60 per cent as much light at the edges as in the center. In many theatre installations, the fall-off is as much as 50 per cent.

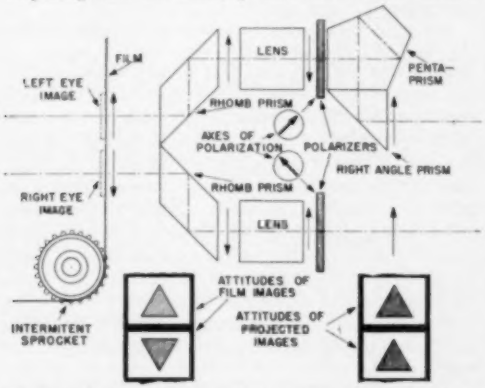

Diagram of an improved optical system for simultaneous projection of the two images comprising the stereoscopic pair.

The projection end of this system, using standard projector heads, has two optical trains containing prisms as well as lenses. These components are arranged so that the light beam enters and exits normal to the prism surfaces and there is no displacement or distortion such as would take place with wedge prisms. Alignment of the images on the screen is effected by a micrometer control to shift the lenses. In the lower optical train, transmitting the right eye image (the one having the conventional attitude), the image passes through in the conventional manner, reversing to "heads up" in the projection lens. In the upper optical train, transmitting the left eye image (the one having the "flipped over" attitude), the image is brought to conventional attitude in a pentaprism and right angle prism forward of the lens.

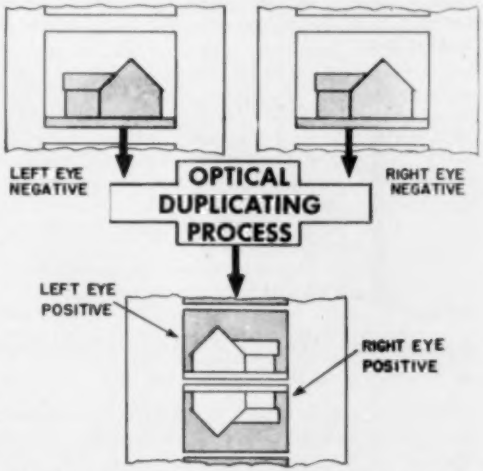

Diagram of transfer of images from the two negative films to the single film carrying the two disparate images.

The polarizers are placed in front of the lenses away from the intense heat.

Prints for this system of projection are not made directly from the original negatives. Duplicate negatives produced in an optical duplicating process are used instead.

Another improved single-film method has the images turned on their sides. This arrangement provides for the use of the full standard aperture in case the pair of images is to occupy only one standard frame. A series of prism elements between the film and the lens turns these images 90°. The inverted image is "flipped over" in the pentaprism and right angle prism in front of the lens. Otherwise, the practical advantages of this variation are comparable to those of the method which is discussed in the preceding few paragraphs.

Another method, devised by the author, for attaining equal illumination for both members of the stereoscopic pair is also illustrated. Here, there are two mirrors arranged between the light source and the film. The lower mirror is a transmission-reflection type, with a reflective coating that will reflect half the light to the upper mirror, one-half the light passing through to one member of the pair. The upper mirror reflects one-half the original light beam to the other member. Again, two projection lenses are used, as in the other systems with the polarizers in front of them.

Diagram of improved single-film method with the images turned on their sides.

In this system the images do not have to be inverted in relation to each other, since the illuminating circle falls upon the same corresponding area in each. The light-circle can be reduced in size to fit the area occupied by one frame, adding efficiency. Added efficiency also results from the reduction in the number of glass-to-air surfaces. Additionally, there is less possibility for dirt or "fogging" on the optical elements. In contradistinction to the other methods, which require no lamphouse changes, this method does require a few changes in the lamphouse to accommodate the two mirrors.

A dual-image single-film does not add significantly to print costs, to the costs of studio production, to shipping and handling costs between exchange and theatre, nor does it require dual projectors and added labor costs for projection. This single projection method does not introduce the unwanted possibility of images out of synchronism with each other, a hazard that exists in dual projection. It assures precise registration, one image with the other. Alignment is no problem, since both images are framed together by the same frame-setting lever. There can be no jiggling or jittering between the images such as is present in any dual system no matter how well made the projector mechanisms.

OTHER STEREOSCOPIC METHODS

The Friese-Greene Process

The first stereoscopic motion picture was made by William Friese-Greene who patented his process in 1893. He used two negative films, one behind each lens. The positive images were projected side by side on a screen and viewed through a cumbersome stereoscope permitting each eye to see only the picture intended for it. The complexity of this system barred it from any commercial application.

The Grid System

The grid system has been frequently proposed and a large number of variations on the basic method have been suggested during the past 40 years.

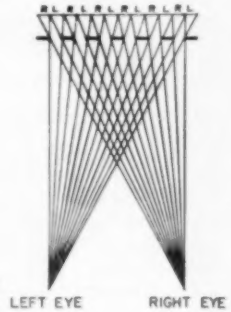

Diagram of the fundamental "grid system" of stereoscopy.

Basically, the grid system employs a screen containing a large number of vertically placed parallel opaque bars forming a grating having open or transparent spaces between them. This grid is placed some distance in front of the projection screen, the grating in the grid being designed so that the right eye sees only that portion of the screen on which the picture record for the right eye appears, the bars in the grating hiding the left eye image from the right eye. It does the same thing for the other eye.

The chief problem in using the grid system is that the observer's viewing distance, angle of view, and of eye placement in relation to the grid are of a fixed interlocking relationship. Disturb one of the three and proper viewing fails. A slight shift to the right or left results in the breakdown of "correct individual seeing" for each eye, and a double image become apparent, or else a pseudoscopic effect results. Improvements have been made on the basic grid system, but serious shortcomings still remain as an intrinsic part thereof. This particularly applies to the loss of light. While a light loss is common to all stereo projection systems, it is particularly severe in this one, due to the fact that the opaque areas in the grating have to be (in most cases) about three times that of the open areas in order to keep the images from overlapping.

Another matter that must be given consideration is the appearance of the grating to the observer. The dark bars and light spaces should be small enough to be virtually invisible as a banded pattern. To make the grating lines invisible, the spacing of the elements should be no larger than about 1/3500 of the viewing distance.

We shall call the grating space G_s.

Then $$G_s = \frac{D_v}{3500 \text{ (or more)}}$$

Where D_v is the viewing distance.

Thus, if $D_v = 60''$, $G_s = .0175''$, approx.

And if $D_v = 120''$, $G_s = .035''$, etc.

The distance, d_g, of any selected grating in front of the screen depends on the relationship of the distance D_v to d_g, or by the relationship of I to D_v.

With the usual grid system, the picture through the grating is viewed by converging the eyes at or near the grating, forming an angle. In order for the grating effectively to select the images properly for the eyes, the disparate members of the stereoscopic pair must be projected through the grating at the same angle.

The New York Times, early in 1944, reported that Simyon Ivanov, a Soviet poster artist, had invented a screen made up of tiny squares of thousands of strands of fine wire which produced third-dimensional effects without the use of eye-glasses. James Aldridge, writing on the same subject for the North American Newspaper Alliance, reported that the images reproduced through the screen were "coarse and blurred."

The article goes on to say that the original Ivanov grid system had been improved and developed in the Sgvintorgkino Studio to the point where it promised to become practicable. To quote from the article:

> The glass screen is engraved with more than 2,000 converging lines, and it is in these markings that the secret of the new screen lies. In photographing third-dimensional movies, the only alteration required on standard cameras is the addition of two or more mirrors fitted near the lenses to reflect the images onto the film.

Obviously, this appears to describe Ivanov's photographic process as being an application of the beam-splitter principle.

The article goes on to say:

> In showing the film, it is projected onto "two or more mirrors," instead of directly onto the screen, which reflects the shadows onto the glass screen. In turn, the lines on the screen unscramble the images, resulting in a clearer image than has hitherto been obtained in third-dimensional film experiments.

Then, in October 1945, the Wall Street Journal reported further on the Ivanov development:

> Moscow (AP)—The Soviet film industry is preparing a surprise for the world's movie fans—a special production of Robinson Crusoe to be exhibited on a new stereoscopic screen designed to give rounded, three-dimensional images.
> Semeon Pavlovich Ivanov, the inventor, said that the screen creates an illusion so perfect that people unconsciously dodge when pictures of birds or airplanes are shown.
> Ivanov said he believed the screen surpasses anything Hollywood had done to achieve realism in the exhibition of motion pictures.

On April 29, 1948, the New York Herald-Tribune published the following:

> Moscow, April 28 (AP)—The Communist newspaper "Pravda" disclosed today that Semyon P. Ivanov, described as the inventor of three-dimensional motion pictures, had been removed from the job of scientific chief of the special studio in which he perfected the invention.
> The newspaper (Pravda) said that I. Bolshakov, Motion Picture Minister, did not take Mr. Ivanov's work seriously, tried to picture him as a faker and publicity seeker and finally pulled him off with the excuse that he was freeing him from his administrative duties.

Pravda went on to state:

> That's how the cinema industry freed itself of the worrisome individual whose name will go down in the history of the Soviet and world cinema.

Truly, workers on the grid method of stereoscopy have a bad time when someone eventually discovers that the images don't appear satisfactory throughout an auditorium.

Parallax Stereograms

Parallax stereograms are of two principal kinds, one using a grating, or "grid" as the selecting screen placed in front of the images, and the other using a selective screen consisting of small cylindrical lens elements, lenticules, side by side, and running vertically.

The "grid" system was introduced by Berthier in 1896 and was the first form of stereoscopic viewing of still pictures that did not require accessories. The grid consisted of vertical bars with spaces in between. The grid was usually made on a high contrast photographic plate. The picture was a composite which had the two images broken up into bands, the image bands for one eye being interlaced between the image bands for the other. When the grid was spaced at the prescribed distance in front of the composite and viewed from the correct distance, the observer was able to see a binocular view.

The "lenticular" system used a selective screen sometimes registered in front of the images; sometimes directly bonded to the composite photograph. The lenticules do not cut down the reflected light as do the bars in the grid system. In one system, the composite picture is made in a single lens camera which swings through an arc during exposure. The center of the arc is in the plane of the subject.

Lenticular systems are credited to several inventors; among them F. E. Ives and his son, Dr. H. E. Ives. Dr. Ives called his the "Parallax Panoramagram." Improvements have been made and further developments carried out by the Americans, Vanbenschoeten and Winnek, and the Frenchman Bonnet.

The Zafiropulo Process

Another invention employing the lenticular principle is that of Jean Zafiropulo, who set out to apply it to the motion picture in particular. The process requires extremely accurate alignment of all elements in photography and projection.

The Zafiropulo process involves the use of a film containing embossed spherical lens elements in its base. Prints must have their lens elements exactly aligned with those in the negative. The lens elements must register with the greatest exactitude in relation to the sprocket holes in the film. Sprocket teeth, engaging the sprocket holes, serve as the basic registration points for picture steadiness. Film shrinkage, which is over ¼ per cent in the lowest-shrink film base, will have to be overcome to prevent lens-element misalignment with relation to the sprocket teeth, and in turn to prevent misalignment of the film lens-elements and the screen lens-elements.

The Zafiropulo process requires only one lens in photography, but it must be of large diameter, from 2½" to 3", and such a lens must be of long focus, over 6" in an f/2.5 lens. This is about 153mm compare with 40mm and 50mm lenses, which are the most frequently used in film studios. This long focus lens requires more studio space than is needed in conventional filming.

Several other methods have been proposed for the lenticulated (goffered) film process of movie stereoscopy. One is, in essence, an application of the "beam splitter" principle, differing from it in that it produces a series of bands for each image. One band, for part of the left eye image, is formed through each lenticule, and another band is formed adjacent to it for the corresponding part of the right eye image, through the same lenticule. The lens must be operated at its widest aperture.

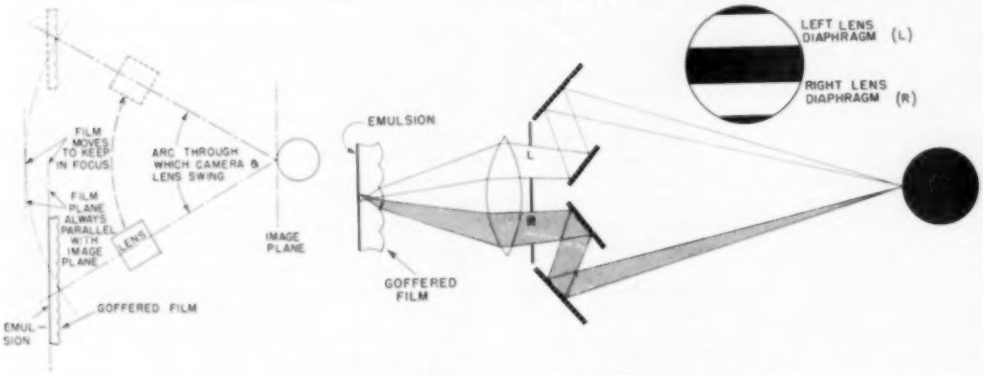

Diagram (left) of one type of camera for making lenticular stereograms. Right—Diagram of one method of lenticular stereoscopy employing the beam-splitter principle with the addition of slit diaphragms.

Lippman's "Integral System" of Stereoscopy

The process of "integral" photography discovered by Lippman in 1908 utilized a screen composed of an almost infinite number of small "lens elements" in the form of pin-holes. It affords what most who have seen it consider the ultimate in stereoscopic viewing. It differs from any other system of stereoscopy in that it provides a much larger number of images in the plane of the photograph and "reduces the number of viewing instruments to zero." But Lippman's integral photographs can be made only as transparencies, and they cannot be projected, nor can they be reproduced to supply copies that have the qualities existing in the original.

These integrated stereograms are made through a screen having a great number of pin-holes, each acting as a camera lens. No camera is used; the pin-holes serving as lenses. The screen can be a photographic image in a contrasty emulsion on the front side of a glass plate with the photographic image produced through it on an emulsion on the back. The holes must be quite small; their size being established by the rules applying to pin-hole photography. There must be a great number of holes for every square inch, and the plates should be quite large, 8" x 10" or more.

Exposure is made through the pin-holes, and since the effective aperture of each pin-hole is extremely small, long time exposures are essential. They cannot be satisfactorily reproduced; hence copies are not obtainable, and the negative image has to be rendered into a positive by reversal. Viewing should be with a mirror placed so that the proper left-right attitudes of the images can be obtained.

The nature of the process excludes it from practical usefulness, particularly for motion pictures, but it is an interesting thing with which to play, and can be experimented upon by anyone having the required facilities.

Single Lens Camera for Motion Picture Stereoscopy

If two strip stereo films are used, such things as titles can be made by exposing one image, for the required footage, then shifting the camera to expose the other, as is done in making "slide-board" stills referred to earlier in this article.

A variation of the principle can be applied to obtain stereoscopic motion pictures, especially aerial shots. The author has made such films using only one camera, and making only one negative. Two prints were made from these single negatives and projected in interlock on two machines. However, the prints were projected with one print having its frames displaced in relation to those of the other. The number of frames displaced is governed by the plane's elevation above the ground and above the nearest object, in scenes looking straight down. Frame displacement is also governed by the ground speed of the plane. A plane flying at 100 miles per hour will cover 144 feet a second, which means that six feet is covered in every second for a film speed of 24 frames a second. A full reel was made during flights over New York City, the camera pointing straight down. The plane was flown at 2500 feet, and slow-motion photography of 96 frames a second was used.

A film speed of 96 frames a second with a plane speed of 100 miles per hour gives 1½ feet of advance along the course as registered by every frame. Using the equation $\frac{D \times d}{D - d} \div 50$, established the base of the interaxial that would result in the most startling visual effect with the least eyestrain. The farthest plane, D, the ground; the nearest plane, d, the top of the Empire State building; and the divisor, 50, indicated an interaxial base of 40 feet and this was achieved synthetically by a displacement of one film with the other of 30 frames. Actually, a displacement of 15 frames was finally selected to give the most satisfactory results.

Some stereo shots were made up in this way from stock footage taken from a plane flying over the Andes. The plane was flying about 180 miles an hour and the exposures were made at normal camera speed. The camera pointed horizontally toward the distant mountains.

The most startling of these shots was one that included "The Christ of the Andes." This heroic statue was in the middle distance and stood out in vivid relief against the mountains beyond.

There is one thing that creates quite a problem: any unsteadiness in the airplane's flight. This comes out in the projection as a constantly changing vertical and horizontal, and sometimes rotational displacement between the images. Such displacements existed in the films we made and had to be eliminated by optical duping methods involving a complexity of steps. But it was an interesting experiment and worth the trouble.

The Vectograph

Vectograph is the name applied to a clear plastic sheet on which an image may be rendered in terms of varying degrees of polarization, and viewed through a polarizing filter. The vectograph can accommodate an image on both its sides, and each image can be made to have its axis of polarization at right angles to that of the other. A stereo vectograph has the images of a stereo pair printed respectively on top and bottom of a vectograph sheet, and is viewed through polarizing spectacles with its respective windows having polarizing axes corresponding to those of the vectograph images. In slide form, the three-dimensional vectograph can be shown in a standard monocular projector without filters. As in other systems using polarized light, silver non-depolarizing screens and polarizing viewing spectacles are required.

During World War II the three-dimensional vectograph was used by the armed services for aerial reconnaissance and for training personnel in various skills. Other uses for this novel, paper-thin stereo picture will doubtless be found. Its picture quality is excellent and its ease of handling and processing are distinct advantages for any photographic process.

Three Dimensional Pictures and Television

Inevitably today, any new method of visual presentation both still and motion, can be telecast. As a matter of fact, an experimental stereo-television system has been at work in the Argonne National Laboratories. It permits an operator to keep a precise watch over the "hot" materials he is handling by remote control. Equipped with a pair of viewing spectacles and with eyes glued to a pair of television screen images which are transmitted by a binocular television camera, the operator does get a three-dimensional impression. But the problems involved in presenting satisfactory three-dimensional television to the public may be so very great that, by comparison, the problems of introducing color television have been small indeed. It is anybody's guess when stereo television will enjoy a widespread audience; if the history of stereo movies can provide a clue, the time is many years away.

Non-Stereo System

A system which has recently been described as producing a three-dimensional effect is the Cinerama development of Fred Waller. This method, requiring a multiplicity of cameras and projectors, presents a dramatic panoramic view of the scene photographed. But it is not three-dimensional at all, since it does not present a mutually exclusive image to each eye, the basic requirement of any three-dimensional system. (To be continued)

Camera Club Manual

H. J. Johnson, FPSA

In the following section of the revised Camera Club Manual, we continue discussion of the problems of newer clubs.

Getting Members

First, and one of the major undertakings of a new club, is to initiate a steady, healthy growth in membership. This may be done by working hard and continuously for that goal, and with the club officers directing and encouraging, and every member helping.

The new organization can acquire members in various ways, such as:

1. Informing all camera stores of the organization of the club and inviting photographers to attend. Helpful to the camera store is a card of invitation for its bulletin board, or a number of printed invitations to be handed to customers.
2. Keeping the local newspapers informed of what is taking place, and enlisting the support of the editors in getting advance notices and following reports of meetings published.

3. Making up a list of available local photographers, and writing each a friendly letter, inviting attendance at meetings, suggesting membership in the club.
4. Making contacts with officials of art stores, art museums, art galleries, libraries, and other cultural centers, and stressing the availability of memberships in the club.
5. Inviting everyone conceivably interested to attend meetings and then, at these meetings, (a) getting the names and addresses of guests, (b) extending open invitations to join, and (c) making joining easy and prompt.
6. Appointing an officer or member of the club as head of a Reception Committee which will meet every guest, introduce the guest to members and to the chairman or members of the Membership Committee and put the guest in a mood of liking the club and its people and of wanting to join.
7. Establishing contacts with the officials of schools and other educational institutions, and informing them that advanced students interested in photography will be welcomed as club members.
8. Establishing contacts with large fraternal and social organizations and informing them that members interested in photography will be welcome at club meetings.
9. Seeing to it that friendly, inviting notices of meetings are mailed, at least a week in advance, to all guests, and to others interested. Keep notifying and inviting these people for at least three meetings.
10. Conducting a photographic school which the general public may attend. The tuition fee may be applied toward the membership fee.

New members should be introduced to the club at the earliest possible moment and made welcome. Guests also may be introduced by name. (They should not be asked to introduce themselves in open meeting, a practice which tends to be embarrassing.)

New camera clubs and old alike have membership problems for which only they can find the solutions. The average club probably will not seek to be exclusive. Ownership of camera equipment, interest in photography, or personality can be adequate requirements for membership. On the other hand, some clubs may wish to have certain barriers to membership for reasons they regard as good and sufficient. Such clubs may wish to have a membership or Admissions Committee.

The more democratic the club, the easier and more rapid its growth. The more exclusive the club, the more difficult and the slower its growth. Snobbishness has little sales appeal in camera clubs.

Few clubs, except for small and exclusive special-purpose organizations, question the photographic abilities of prospective members. Many clubs have in their membership persons who for one reason or another participate only vicariously in photography.

Possibly an important question confronting some new camera clubs is whether to admit women. By and large, camera clubs new and old, decreasingly raise this question. The co-ed club is quite as successful, and its meetings much more enjoyable, than the club which restricts its membership to either sex. Experience presents no substantial reason why mixed membership should not be sought nor, indeed, why it should not be encouraged.

Another problem is that of "junior" members. Teenagers may not be as stable in their interests as older members, but there are usually a few who maintain interest. In addition, those who drift away are potential members in the future.

Club Publicity

Helpful to the growth and activity of the new camera club is continuing and judicious publicity.

Notices of meetings should be sent to local publications several days, and preferably a week, in advance. Personal contacts of the club officer or member in charge of publicity with the local press is desirable. In this connection, the newspaper camera staff should not be overlooked. Newspaper photographers have little spare time, but they are as ardently and deeply interested in camera work as the most fanatical amateur. Their membership in the club can be a real asset.

Reports of meetings should be provided to interested daily newspapers immediately after the meeting. Newspapers in some communities will not be greatly interested; others may be more cooperative, and their friendly interest may be cultivated to advantage. Newspaper camera editors naturally will be actively interested.

Notices of meetings posted in camera stores, cultural centers, and other gathering places are helpful forms of publicity.

Less direct but of good potential value is publicity in camera magazines. Such publicity cannot be expected frequently but when obtainable it helps make the club's name more widely familiar to photographers. (Note: "Publicity" is not a once-a-year announcement of new officers by the secretary!)

In general, clubs which do not participate in outside competitions and activities are less likely to obtain fame than is one which is alert to the value of outside stimulation.

Camera Club Relationships

The new camera club can benefit by establishing friendly relationships with photographic equipment dealers, professional photographers, news photographers, and others of the camera trade, and with art groups, schools, museums, libraries, and other cultural organizations.

Many members of the camera trade personally are interested in photography, but hesitate to attend camera club meetings, sometimes because they are not invited, and again because they fear clubs or members will wish to "talk shop" with them or even will seek to obtain preferential treatment. In the trade will be found many people of excellent membership calibre who will react to friendly interest and treatment, and who may be invited to enjoy photography with the club with the assurance that the business aspects of camera work will not come up. Many professional photographers also are interested in camera club activities and frequently will participate if they too are permitted through the club to enjoy photography.

Relationships with educational institutions, art groups, and cultural centers may at first be difficult. The question whether photography is art is unimportant but long-lived and ubiquitous. The need for diplomacy is indicated, and once complete understanding is reached, the camera club may find contacts, and even joint meetings, with art groups particularly enjoyable.

Relationships between camera clubs, both new and old, advisably may be maintained on a friendly basis. Joint meetings, exchange meetings, sharing of field trips, and other undertakings, easily are possible. Inter-club competitions within the limits of friendliness and good sportsmanship make good program features.

No club should overlook the broader relationship with clubs all over the world through membership in PSA. (To be continued.)

Anatomy of the Face

PROBABLY there are very few people who are not pleased by a flattering portrait of themselves, so it would behoove the photographic artist to endeavor to minimize the defects and emphasize the best features of their subjects. This can be accomplished to a great extent by studying the anatomy of the face, and the lighting that produces the desired effect. This was an all-important part of the training of artists long before the camera came into being, and the same rules are still applicable to portraiture today.

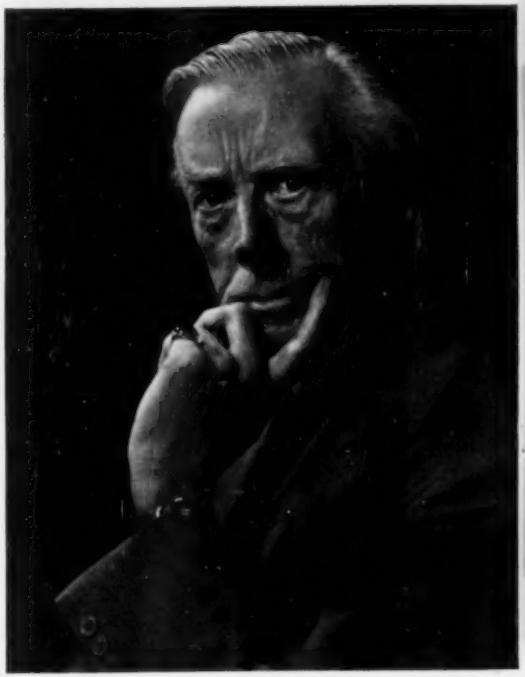
First let us consider the planes of the face: the separation between the tip of the nose and cheek, the distance of separation between the lower lip and the indentation below, and the space between the ridge of the nose and the eye. There are also the forehead, which protrudes, the upper jaw, the cheek bone, and last, the chin.

Next we have the various shapes, or contours: the square, oval, narrow and full face. This gives the general shape of the head which we must study in order to light it to the best advantage. There are no perfect faces, but with corrective lighting, some can be made to appear almost perfect—these we call photogenic.

Let us first study the nose, as it is more difficult to subdue than any other feature, and the cast shadows can distort the entire face. Do not highlight a nose or it may appear to be broken. Turn the head until you find the nose to be straight with the face lines, then take care in raising and lowering your lights, to control the shadows. Use a lower camera angle for a long nose, and be careful to avoid a shadow directly beneath it, as that would tend to increase the apparent length. A thin, straight nose is not so difficult, but be sure the side is well lighted, as this will make it look a bit larger.

A flat nose is portrayed best when flat lighting is used, especially in the case of very young babies. A broad nose will need retouching, as strong lights on the sides will make it look larger than ever. This type has flared nostrils, and you cannot eliminate them with lights. However, you can help to reduce the apparent size of the nose by having one side in shadow.

Eyes—"the windows of the soul"—are the most expressive part of the face, so they must be carefully lighted to bring out their best points. Deep-set eyes require a low camera angle and floor-level illumination, so they will not be in too much shadow. Try to light for emphasis, but do not overlight. When you have finished a portrait, cover all but the eyes, and see if they show interest and personality. This is the best test for the success of your efforts.



ERNEST THESIGER — Karl Pollak

Try to have your subject relax the muscles of the mouth, as a tenseness will cause an unnatural expression, thus spoiling an otherwise excellent likeness. Use of makeup on thin lips, care in posing and proper lighting can do much to correct faults such as a narrow mouth, protruding lips, and dropping lines around the mouth.

Careful study of your subject, and special attention to defects that can be minimized by proper lighting and camera angle will do much to improve your portraits. Emphasize the most attractive features, and the results will be extremely gratifying.

BOOK REVIEWS

SUMMER'S CHILDREN, A Photographic Cycle of Life at Camp, by Barbara Morgan, Morgan & Morgan, Scarsdale, N. Y., 160 pages, 8½x10, illustrated, cloth, $5.00, 1951.

Photographers who wish to study the modern technique of "writing with photographs," and grown-ups who desire to live again the delightful camp days of youth, will find enjoyment and satisfaction in this book. Students of child and camp psychology will like it, too, for the words of Dr. Mary Fisher Langmuir and Helen Haskell make it that. Even the author barges into the technical when she explains that she views the volume "as an affirmation of the art and science of human relationship" and a seeking for an "improved quality of life."

Once the reader has leaped the dismal barrier of scientific jargon which opens the book, a new and enjoyable world of big pictures and small words is shown in photographic panorama. Here are exquisite photographs of child life at camp, with children looking, acting, and talking like real moppets, not specimens.

All of camp life is here—the barn, the horses, and kindergarten equitation; the lake and boating; the animals, wild and domestic; the nature study classes; the hike, with dinner al fresco in the chasm or on the mountain; the cabins, tents, and bunks; the parents' visit; the girl who can turn cartwheels and the fat boy who cannot.

And then the author, praise be, has included a chapter, "Hocus Pocus Dominocus," which presents many of the mystic poems and sayings of childhood. Plus stories and pictures about the goat who ate the mail, the horse who ran away, and other interesting characters essential to any camp which is a camp.

This is a book for photographers and for adults. And the more serious and aged they are, the more they need it. Not merely a book, but a contribution to the real enjoyment of life.

PHOTOFACTS, Volume Two, edited by George L. Wakefield, The Fountain Press, London, England, 392 pages, 4¾ by 7, illustrated, cloth, $4.75, 1951.

This volume combines the information previously published in the separate "Photofacts" booklets on darkrooms, film development, contact printing, enlarging, print development, holiday photography, outdoor lighting, and lantern slides. The editor explains that it deals with established photographic techniques, presenting the tried-and-true formulas and methods of experienced photographers, avoiding fads and novelties.

Both beginning and advanced photographers will find the book helpful because of its thoroughness, and also because of its constant striving to guide the reader to making thoroughly good pictures. Many photographs, used as illustrations, make the volume additionally interesting and informative.

Photographers planning to take a camera jaunt will find the section on holiday photography particularly helpful. While it would seem as if such photography were a matter merely of packing the camera gear and setting off, there's much more to it. And most of the much more is presented herein.

NEGATIVE FAULTS AND HOW TO CORRECT THEM, Photofacts No. 23, and PRINT FAULTS AND HOW TO CORRECT THEM, Photofacts No. 24, both by Frank Harris, The Fountain Press, London, England, 40 pages, 4¾x7¾, illustrated, paper, 50 cents each, 1951.

These two books summarize the common shortcomings of negatives and prints; tell how to rectify them, when possible; how to avoid them in the future. The recommended processes are long-established and simple. The reader is encouraged to undertake the remedial processes without fear that they are too difficult. Good, solid advice for the amateur who wishes to become the complete and competent photographer.

PHOTOBIOGRAPHY, by Cecil Beaton, Doubleday & Co., Garden City, N. Y., 255 pages, 7x10, illustrated, cloth, $6.00, 1951.

Many photographers have written books, and many books have been written about photography, but none before like this. It is all photography, every word and picture of it. So fascinating that the photographer who starts to read it probably will lose family, friends, meals, and whatever before he puts it down!

Cecil Beaton is—if any do not know—an English photographer who started as a boy with a box camera, promoted himself to a 3A Kodak and a tripod, and then, with no other equipment, worked himself to fame and fortune as portraitist, fashion photographer, and illustrator. In this volume he tells how he did it—by making photographs. Granted he was art sensitive from the first. That he had some art training and undertook theatrical design. That he had art imagination. Yet the secret of his success in photography appears to be that he made photographs and photographs and photographs until the results satisfied him. Then he made photographs.

Well along in this intriguing volume, after Beaton has told how Conde Nast forced him to forsake his 3A and to use a studio camera, and after a friend had sold him on the virtues of a Rollei, he explains that he makes 500 or more exposures on one assignment. He admits that his technical abilities may be weak. Others develop his negatives and make his prints for him. But still Beaton insists he makes photographs, and good photographs, because of his insatiable curiosity about people and things.

As a boy he posed his mother, sisters, friends, and family servants for as long as they would stay put. Later he virtually wore out models, posing them in bowers of artificial flowers, clouds of cellophane, backgrounds of fantastic textiles, baroque settings. He worked days, nights, holidays, summer, spring, winter, fall, indoors, outdoors—making photographs.

The investment of time and energy paid off. Beaton became the photographer of the great. His sitters have included the British royal family, Churchill, Halifax, Gertrude Stein, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, Andre Gide, Katherine Hepburn, Marlene Dietrich, Gary Cooper, Eleanor Roosevelt.

He photographed the war in England, Africa, Libya, Egypt, Burma, India, China, and the United States. "For six months," he explains, "I took hundreds of photographs every week." And once again his persistency and curiosity paid dividends. He received commissions for making photographs which others could have done better, technically. Evidently he did well enough, for "Vogue" magazine gave him a roving commission and a five figure salary and turned him loose to photograph fashions, people, events, scenes, things almost as he wished.

Even then the 3A complex has persisted. His portraits customarily are made with strong overhead light, weak reflected light on the face, and a "hot" backlight to produce a halo—with the result that sitters repeatedly complain of scorched derrieres. And he has had a wonderful time, making an experience of every sitting, and expecting every film to provide him with a legacy. Many of his delightful experiences are recounted in the book. Including the time he kept a dowager waiting while he borrowed her sequin wrap for Katherine Hepburn posing as Joan of Arc in coat-of-mail.

This is only one of many books Beaton has written and illustrated with the camera. It is to be hoped it is not the last. For this is a breezy, fantastic, swashbuckling tale of an irrepressibly gay photographer who sees every photographic rule and tradition as something to be ignored, trampled upon, or smashed—and who succeeds marvelously with this process.

P. S. He admits that the rules must be known before they can be broken successfully.

We are requested by Allen R. Greenleaf, author of Photographic Optics (New York, The Macmillan Company, 1950) to state that he did not approve recent direct-mail advertising to PSA members that claims (1) that the book supplies "information on the construction, merits, and deficiencies, of all photographic lenses"; (2) that "He gives specifications and drawings of all types of lenses, . . ."; (3) that "It explains . . . the properties, construction, merits, and deficiencies of ALL photographic lenses being manufactured today."

PSA HONORS

John W. McFarlane

Ex-Chairman, PSA National Honors Committee

"I have just received the good news and hardly know what to say. I didn't know I had been proposed for the Honor." This was typical of most letters from those elected to Honors this past year and illustrates the way our Honors procedure is meant to work. The system now functions as it should—"Honors seek the man and not the man seeks Honors." It used to be that some deserving candidates were passed by unless they proposed themselves which very few people will do. The establishment of Divisional Honors Proposal Committees has made sure that no deserving candidates will be overlooked. The type of candidate respected most by the National Honors Committee is the one proposed without his action, and handled by the Divisional Committee.

PSA Honors are just what the word implies. They are not grades of membership nor are they simply certificates of photographic proficiency. They are tokens of worthwhile advancement of photography and assistance to fellow men. Our Honors are at a high level and will continue to be kept there. Undoubtedly, a few mistakes have been made in the past but as far as possible the Honors Committee will uphold a high standard which will reflect credit on the one honored and on the Society.

Four PSA Honors were established some years ago. The Associateship is awarded for really worthwhile advancement of photography in any field. The Fellowship is awarded for outstanding advancement of photography, usually accompanied by extensive public service. The Honorary Membership is awarded for outstanding organizational work for PSA. The Honorary Fellowship, the highest honor, is awarded sparingly and only for the very highest level of achievement in advancing photography. The Honorary Fellowship can be awarded to nonmembers.

The Search Mechanism

Relax! If you rate an Honor, it will certainly be found out and you will be proposed for the proper Honor. Honors Proposal Committees have been established for each Division and the names of their chairmen are given below. The principal function of these Committees are two-fold:

1. To make a thorough search for any deserving candidates.
2. To assist any proposer in the preparation of a suitable application.

In the search for candidates, the District Representatives and the directors of various Divisional Committees should all assist in pointing out to the Divisional Honors Committee any candidates they think should be considered. In general, the Divisional Committee itself will not prepare applications or act as proposer, although when necessary they can obtain a proposer. They will review applications and make suggestions to the proposer for improvement of the application. The Proposal Committee will also convey to the National Honors Committee their opinion of the worthiness of the candidate. The Proposal Committee, however, has no power over any application, i.e., they can not veto any application or prevent it from reaching the National Honors Committee. The National Committee naturally values the opinion of the Divisional Committee but is not bound by it either in electing or rejecting a candidate, It must be repeated that Divisional Committee is not a screening committee, that their main functions are those of search and assistance.

Applications can go directly to Headquarters without going through a Divisional Committee. This is not usually in the best interests of the candidate. A number of poorly prepared applications were received last year which had not received the benefit of the Divisional Committee's consideration. Some candidates may not have been elected for that reason. In any case, the Honors Committee is always curious to know what motive was behind avoiding the Divisional Committee.

So You Want To Propose a Candidate

First of all, don't tell him. In nearly all cases you can get sufficient information about his or her record from friends, wife, secretary, camera club record, etc. If you do tell him you are running a risk of considerable embarrassment if he is not elected.

Talk it over with his PSA friends who share your opinion that he should be honored. Get two PSA members who are not only willing but anxious to serve as endorsers. If you have to twist a man's arm for endorsement, the Honors Committee will hear him yell. In any case, it is your duty to get two endorsers who will promptly return the confidential endorsement on the form which they will receive from Headquarters. It is almost fatal to the candidate's chances to name anyone as endorser without securing his consent. Several candidates were not elected last year for this among other reasons.

When you write up your candidate use the new form, that is the revised 1951 form. Get a copy from your Divisional Committee or from PSA Headquarters. Read the instructions. Get the application typewritten if you can. In giving information, don't assume that the candidate's work is well known. Technical members of the Honors Committee may not be familiar with a pictorialist's achievements. On the other hand, don't go into fine details. A detailed list of salon acceptances is definitely not wanted and it looks like padding. You should be able to give the candidate's record in the two pages provided. Additional material, except in unusual cases, probably will not be circulated to all members of the Honors Committee. Just remember that eight copies of everything will have to be made. Only the stuff which is really worthwhile is going to be copied. Don't send prints, clippings, and the like unless you are asked for it.

Send the application to the Divisional Committee Chairman at address below. If you have good reason to do so, you can send it directly to Headquarters for forwarding to the Honors Committee. Observe the deadline and just remember the application will get more careful consideration from the Divisional Committee if you send it in considerably before the deadline. Your deadline is March 1st no matter which way you route the application. If your application doesn't arrive on time or if your endorsers do not return their endorsements within the time requested, the application will probably be held over until the following year. Such applications will not be forwarded to the National Honors Committee.

If Your Candidate Is Not Elected

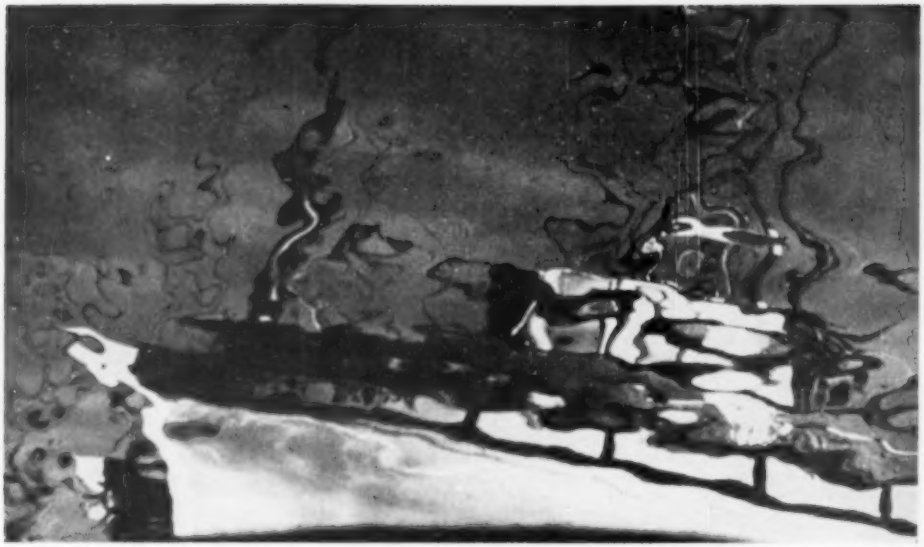
Elected candidates are notified directly. In the case of those not elected, the proposer but not the candidate is notified.

If you do get a letter from the National Honors Committee Chairman that starts out "It is my unhappy duty . . ." don't pout and start throwing things. Either the application was poorly prepared or your candidate just doesn't have enough achievements to his or her credit. Don't send in the same application next year. It is better to wait a couple of years so that additional achievements can be cited.

All of this sounds as though we are inviting a large crop of Honors applications. We are not. Most of the backlog of deserving candidates was caught last year. We do want to have any deserving people honored, but their number should not be great.

How Not To Get An Honor

1. Join PSA just to get an Honor.
2. Propose yourself and don't bother about endorsers.
3. Use bribery or threats on your endorsers.
4. Use an old application form.
5. Ignore your Divisional Honors Proposal Committees.
6. Don't read the instructions.
7. Write the application in a longhand, illegible scrawl.
8. Add 15 pages of details including your first double exposure with a box camera.
9. Send the application in late.
10. Send gifts to the Honors Committee. (Brother, if you get an Honor, we give up!)



THE PHANTOM SHIP — Karl A. Baumgaertel, APSA

The correct position of the plate that appeared on page 681 of the November 1951 PSA JOURNAL up-side-down. This is a reflection purposely inverted to make an abstraction. Our sincere apologies to Mr. Baumgaertel for the error, which we are pleased to correct herewith.

Divisional Honors Committees

Chairmen of the Honors Recommendations Committees for the various Divisions are:

Color—Paul J. Wolf, APSA, 354 Fort Washington Ave., Hawthorne, N. Y.

Motion Picture—Nestor Barrett, APSA, 1220 University Ave., San Jose, Calif.

Nature—Louise K. Broman, APSA, 6058 S. Troy St., Chicago 29, Ill.

HONORS APPLICATIONS DEADLINE

Because of the earlier date of the 1952 PSA Convention in New York City, the deadline for applications for Honors' consideration has been moved up to March 1st.

All applications must be submitted on new forms; don't use any old ones that may be available. Obtain the revised form from PSA Headquarters, 2005 Walnut St., Philadelphia 3, Penna.

Applications must be received in Philadelphia no later than March 1st for consideration this year.

THAT CHAMPIONSHIP MEDAL

THOMAS T. FIRTH

A Championship Medal is not only an honor, but it is beautiful as well, and worth displaying nicely. Therefore, my first thought upon receiving mine was, "What shall I do with it?" I recalled seeing one that was carried in a loose-change pocket—subject to being scratched and dulled by contact with other objects, and I felt that mine deserved better care. After much time and thought I found one solution—a wall plaque—as shown in the accompanying photograph.

If you have access to a lathe, your task will be made much easier, but if not, you will have to whittle or carve the base. I used ¼ inch plywood, cut to 3¼ inches in diameter, sanded to a satin-smooth surface, and left in this natural finish. However, the disk may be varnished, lacquered or painted in color to suit the individual taste.

The mat-like ring, or frame, was turned from ⅛ inch masonite to an outside diameter of 2⅞ inches, and inside to 2⅝ inches, with the inner edge beveled for added beauty.

The ring was then glued to the wooden disk, and the medal affixed in the center of the former by four brass nails, as inconspicuous as possible. When a small brass screw eye was placed in the top edge of the plaque, for hanging, the job was finished.

Possibly some may prefer purchasing a small, commercial picture frame in wood or gold, mounting the medal in the center of it, backed by velvet. This will give the same desired effect. Others, perhaps, will enjoy making their own frame, or plaque, and this method of mine may help, or at least serve as an inspiration to create some new method of display. In any event, let us get these medals out of obscurity and put them where they may be seen and admired.

GORDON C. ABBOTT

One of photography's most loved figures, Gordon Crowell Abbott, FPSA, ARPS, of Taxco, Mexico, died in Mexico City on September 6th after an illness of two months. For many years Mr. Abbott was PSA's Honorary Representative to Mexico.

Born in Goshen, Indiana, Mr. Abbott started with the Gross Printing Press Company of Chicago in 1902, became their secretary in 1921 and remained in that position until his retirement in 1933. He was a noted violinist and played with the Edison Symphony Orchestra for many years. He was a co-founder of the Evanston Academy of Fine Arts and a member of the River Forest Library Board, the River Forest Tennis Club and the Union League Club of Chicago.

In 1907 Mr. Abbott joined the Chicago Camera Club, serving in practically every capacity, including the presidency from 1917–1918, exhibition chairmanship, program chairmanship, etc. He started their publication, "The Exposure," and was its editor for a decade. He was a prolific exhibitor and was honored by many photographic organizations for distinguished pictorial artistry and in recognition of long and distinguished service and devotion to the Art of photography. He wrote many articles on photography and served as a juror on countless international exhibitions.

During the past two years, Mr. Abbott devoted all his time to experimenting with the Palladium Process, using hand sensitized papers. In May 1951 fifty of his prints were exhibited by the Smithsonian Institution in Washington and later at The Camera Club in New York City.

On the occasion of his election as an Associate of the Oval Table Society, high tribute was paid to Mr. Abbott's unselfish devotion to the best in photography. His many friends throughout the United States and Mexico mourn the passing of one of the truly great figures in amateur photography.

EDWIN F. CASPER

Edwin F. Casper, a Charter Member of PSA and one of its most loyal supporters during the early days, died recently in Milwaukee after an illness of eight months. He was owner and president of Casper's Foto Shop, Milwaukee, a business which he founded in 1931.

He was an active photographer long before going into the business as a dealer and took a prominent part in the affairs of the Photo Pictorialists of Milwaukee and other local clubs. He was never too busy to help out with programs or other means of promoting amateur photography.

Print and Slide Contests

We have been receiving numerous requests for entry forms for the Nature Division print and slide contests. We are very happy to receive these requests as it indicates an ever increasing interest. We note, however, that there are a goodly number of these requests from members of the Nature Division. We wish to advise that it is not necessary for members of the Division to make requests for entry blanks as they are mailed to all members of the Division as of record on the first of the month preceding the contests. Envelopes for mailing these blanks are addressed at Headquarters and forwarded to the Chairman for stuffing and mailing so that every one of our members should receive them unsolicited. For the benefit of readers of this column who are not members of the Nature Division and who wish to compete in these contests, please send your requests for blanks to the writer whose address appears at the head of this column.

Faces in Leaf Scars

If you are ever at a loss to find novel or interesting material for your nature photography in the winter time, by all means consider the subject of LEAF SCARS. Here, in the nearest park or woodland, you will find fantasy to your heart's content, in the shape of hundreds of droll faces peering out at you from the twigs of different species of trees and shrubs.

"What on earth," you may well ask, "are 'leaf scars'?". Here is the answer. When last year's leaf fell off in the autumn, it left a scar where it was attached to the twig. This scar represents the cross section of the leaf stem at its point of attachment. These scars assume a wide variety of shapes, each of which is a definite characteristic of the parent tree. They are hardly ever round, but may be ovals, crescents, triangles, heart-shapes, shield-shapes, or in a few cases a complete circle around the twig.

In the summer time, while the leaf is still alive and active, its stem is provided with tubes or channels for carrying sap and manufactured food. These "fibro-vascular bundles," as botanists call them, must be sealed off before the leaf falls in autumn so that no sap will be lost. Their dried ends then appear as dots within the leaf scar, and are known as "bundle scars."

Just as the shape of the scar itself is a definite characteristic of the tree or shrub, so is also the number and arrangement of these dots within the scar. They may be arranged singly or in rows, rings or crescents. The intriguing fact about all this is that these bundle scars often form the eyes, nose and mouth of fantastic "faces," the outline of which is the leaf scar itself. To add to this fantasy, the winter bud which forms in the axil of the leaf before it falls off often provides a "hat" for the face below it.

Young, fast-growing saplings produce larger twigs and leaves than older trees, with correspondingly more luxurious specimens of leaf scars. As you might expect, the largest scars are to be found on the trees having the largest leaves, such as Ailanthus, Ash, Catalpa, Hercules Club, Horse Chestnut, Hickory, Kentucky Coffee Tree, Magnolia, Sumac, Walnut, etc. Altho the type of face is determined by the species of the tree, no two faces have exactly the same expression. You may find them happy or sad, ludicrous or grotesque, on the same tree.

A very good place to start your observations of these droll faces would be among the Walnuts. The scar itself is roughly heart-shaped, with three horseshoe-shaped bundle scars, which provide the eyes and mouth. Atop the scar is the winter bud, suggesting a jaunty hat. The White Walnut has larger and more interesting faces than Black Walnut. The various Hickories also have three bundle scars of somewhat different shape, but similar enough to indicate their membership in the Walnut family.

Ash faces are a lot of fun. A crescent-shaped row of bundle scars suggests huge negroid lips in a good natured grin. You can often find a twig in which one of the lateral buds forms a bulbous nose, two others a pair of bulging eyes, and the terminal bud a fantastic headdress of a jolly African chieftan.

The Elm has a wide oval face with beady eyes and a cocked hat reminding one of a reveller at a New Year's Eve party. Sumac faces have a nose that out-blossoms that of W. C. Fields. Horse Chestnut has a horseshoe-shaped scar, with the bundle scars suggesting the nails. Poplars and Alders also have some surprises in store when you study them.

The "cutest" face I ever found, quite by accident because it is so tiny, was on a twig of Prickly Ash or Toothache Tree. She has a round cherub-like face with laughing eyes, a rosebud mouth and a bright red fluffy hat formed by the fur-covered winter bud. Kentucky Coffee Tree will furnish you with some studies in dog or fox faces, and some can see the face of a camel in Butternut scars.

The enormous doubly-compound leaves of Hercules Club require so much reenforcement at their base that the leaf scar practically surrounds the stem. Sycamore and Sumac have leaf scars that surround the winter bud. Trees with well developed stipules have pronounced stipule scars in addition to their leaf scars.

The winter aspects of trees are many and varied, and lend themselves admirably to photographic recording or even to pictorial treatment. Many a profitable field trip may be spent photographing tree silhouettes, bark patterns, winter buds, galls, fruits, etc. etc. But I still insist that of all of these, none has quite the fascination of a camera study of "Faces in Leaf Scars."

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

A NEW ACTIVITY FOR EVERY PSA MEMBER

Every member of PSA is invited to send entries each month to Picture of the Month, The Photographic Society of America, 2005 Walnut Street, Philadelphia 3, Pa. Prints are to be unmounted, not larger than 8x10, and each will list on the back your name and address, the title of the picture, the Class in which it is entered, your PSA Divisional affiliations, and a list of the portfolios of which you are a member. The last requirement is for those who will be taking part in a special contest between portfolio groups, which will be described later.

All entries are to be mailed in strong envelopes that can be used for the return of prints, discussions, Certificates of Award, or other matter. Return first class postage must be included, first class because much of the discussion of prints may be personal in nature. Entrants from foreign countries need not include return postage.

Prints in each Class will be judged by a special Board of Judges qualified in that particular Class, and five points will be awarded for a First Place print, three points for Second Place, and one point for Honorable Mentions. Every winning print will earn a Certificate of Award, which will carry the name of the maker and the title of the picture, and this will be sent back in the original envelope.

Earned points will be credited to the individual entrants and will be kept cumulatively from month to month, with the top scores being listed in PSA JOURNAL; at the end of the year there will be special prizes for the best scores. While the number of Certificates of Award that will be issued is not limited, one person can win in one month only one counted score, that of his highest scoring print. This is to prevent a small group of the best photographers from winning all the points, and to give everybody a chance.

Prints winning Certificates of Award will be retained, with the permission of the entrants, and will be mounted in books along with the names of the makers and other pertinent information; exhibited at the PSA Convention, and then turned over to the PSA Library for the general uses of the Society and for circulation to interested groups. In this way the prize winners will be doing something worth while for other PSA members less skillful than themselves and will be contributing to the general assets of PSA. This feature is voluntary, if you ask for the return of your prints they will be sent back to you.

Prints not winning Certificates of Award will be returned to the entrants in the original envelopes and, with the exception of the Open Class prints, discussions by experienced photographers will be included, as much and as personal as we are able to give with the facilities at our disposal.

If prints are received from members who are to serve on the presiding Board of Judges, these will be held over to the following month when different judges are making the selections. This activity is for everybody, including judges.

For the month of January 1952, the following Classes are available:

Class 1. Open Pictorial.

No restrictions of any kind, except size, and open to any member of PSA. Prints in this Class will not be discussed when they are returned.

Class 2. Advanced Pictorial.

For any member of PSA who makes his own prints and has not hung more than two different pictures in two international, national or state salons. When prints not winning Certificates of Award are returned, they will be discussed by qualified analysts.

Class 3. Beginners Pictorial.

For any member of PSA who made the original exposure, but had negatives developed or prints made by others, amateur or professional. When prints not winning Certificates of Award are returned, they will be discussed by qualified analysts.

Class 4. Open Portrait.

No restrictions of any kind except size, and open to any member of PSA. Prints in this Class will not be discussed when they are returned.

Class 5. Beginners Portrait.

For any member of PSA who made the original exposure, but had negatives developed or prints made by others, either amateur or professional. When prints not winning Certificates of Award are returned, they will be discussed by qualified analysts.

These five Classes are under the direction of the Pictorial Division, but all members of PSA, whether Pictorial Division members or not, are invited to compete, and are eligible for the outlined services. If special prizes are offered later on for top scores, Pictorial Division membership may be made a requirement to win.

Class 6. Advanced Nature.

For any member of PSA who makes his own prints, but has not had prints accepted in any nature salon. When prints not winning Certificates of Award are returned, they will be discussed by qualified analysts.

Class 7. Beginners Nature.

For any member of PSA who made the original exposure, but had negatives developed or prints made by others, either amateur or professional. When prints not winning Certificates of Award are returned they will be discussed by qualified analysts.

Classes 6 and 7 are under the direction of the Nature Division, but all members of PSA, whether Nature Division members or not, are invited to compete and are eligible for the outlined services. If special prizes are offered later on for top scores, Nature Division membership may be made a requirement to win.

The Nature Division also provides direct two Nature Print Contests, one in January and one in May; and two Color Slide Contests, one in April and one in September. Entry forms for these Open Contests will be mailed to the entire membership of the Nature Division at the proper times.

Class 8. Abstractions, Photograms, Unusual Effects.

An Open Class for every member of PSA, no restrictions of any kind except size. Returned prints will not be discussed, but it is hoped the makers will include discussions when they send the pictures to us. These can be included when mounting the Certificate-winning prints in books for the PSA Library.

Special Contest for the Pictorial and Portrait Portfolios.

The score earned by each print in the general Classes will be credited to the individual, and where membership in Pictorial or Portrait Portfolios is shown on the back, the points will also be credited to each Pictorial or Portrait Portfolio of which the entrant, regular member or Commentator, belongs. The total scores of each portfolio will be kept cumulatively, the highest will be listed in PSA JOURNAL from month to month, and at the end of the year the members of the top scoring portfolio will receive special prizes.

General Information.

The Picture of the Month activity, as listed above, is in the preliminary stage; rules can be changed from time to time and additions to the general Classes or Special Contests can be made when there is a great enough demand for them. Ideas and suggestions will always be welcome from anybody; this is your activity and you can make it anything you like. Address all correspondence to Picture of the Month, The Photographic Society of America, 2005 Walnut Street, Philadelphia 3, Pa.

Chairman.

ON THE JUDGING OF PORTRAITS

MAURICE H. LOUIS, APSA

The judging of portraits presents different problems than those faced by other types of photographs.

The end-use of the portrait, in other words, the aims and intentions of the maker, are of far greater importance than when judging, let us say, a landscape. In one group of portraits under consideration there will be some made to please the subject, some the judges, while others the photographer himself. Yet the judges are unaware which are which and must apply the same values to all.

No two people will agree what makes a good portrait. Nor will two photographers "see" the subject in the same light. Yet all will agree that the finished print must elicit some emotion within the breast of the viewer.

Some portraits will forcefully convey a message, others will subtly create a mood. If the photographer has achieved his purpose, who are the judges to say one is a better approach than the other.

Most portraits strive to reveal the true personality of the subject. At best, it is no easy task! But we do know that success is only obtained if the photographer has been able to capture an expression which is both realistic and alive. There is no room for sham or unnaturalness. This is especially true in pictorial or character portraiture where more imaginative interpretation is permissible.

The techniques or props used are of value but of secondary importance. Likewise are whether the portrait is candid or posed; close-up or long-shot; or expressive of a likeness (a personal photograph) or type (symbolic of a type or idea).

In the final analysis does the portrait make you stop to give it a second glance, does it draw from you an emotion, does it make you think or want to act? If it does any of these, the maker has been successful. How he has accomplished this is relatively unimportant.

Consequently there being no standard techniques for the making of portraits, there can be none for judging them.

October International Club Print Competition

L. to R. Alonzo Lansford, judge, Louis P. Ganucheau, Jr., president of Delta CC, Ray Mathewson, judge, and Fonville Winans, judge. The winning pictures, "The Philosopher", by Sam Cohen of the Oakland CC, first place; "Potters Hands", by Willard C. Hungerford of the "Tiro de Los Padres" Club, second place; and "In the Grove There is Melody" by Edward Bafford of the Baltimore CC, third place. Photo by Mrs. Mona Heinecke, member of Delta CC.

Effective with the first competition of the new season, held on October 27, the International Club Print Competition is now being handled by the Pictorial Division. Robert J. Lauer of Milwaukee, Wisconsin is the new Director of this activity.

The October competition was judged in New Orleans under the sponsorship of the Delta Camera Club, with 236 photographs entered from clubs throughout the United States, Canada, and even from far off India. Louis P. Ganucheau, Jr., president of the Delta CC, commented especially on the fact that print quality was exceptionally good and the subject matter was very diversified.

Judging took place at the Louisiana State Museum's Presbytere Building, located next to St. Louis Cathedral in the heart of the Vieux Carre' (Old City). Quite a few of the club members attended the judging in order to improve their own pictures through the comments of the judges. Among the members of the Delta CC attending was Pops Whitesell, FPSA.

The three judges were well qualified to handle a competition of international scope as they represented various fields:

Mr. Alonzo Lansford, Director of the Isaac Delgado Museum of Art in New Orleans and a well-known judge, represented the artist's viewpoint as applied to photography.

Mr. Ray Mathewson, a locally prominent judge, added balance based on his wide experience in all types of photography with special emphasis on landscapes.

Rounding out the judges was Mr. Fonville Winans, a well-known portraitist, a Master Photographer of the PA of A and a member of the Camera Craftsmen of America.

The highest scoring print received 23 points (out of a possible 30). It was "The Philosopher" made by Sam Cohen of the Oakland CC. Sam will receive a silver medal bearing the PSA emblem. The makers of the next two highest ranking prints, "Potters Hands" by Willard C. Hungerford of the "Tiro de Los Padres" Club, and "In the Grove There is Melody" by Edward Bafford of the Baltimore CC will also receive medals.

Trophies will go to the top ranking clubs in each class, Oakland CC in Class A with 70 points and the Mission Pictorialists of San Francisco in Class B with 57 points.

It is interesting to note that size of a print does not always determine its appeal. One of the highest scoring entries was "Muggin'" by Don Thomas of the Grosse Pointe CC. Don's print was only one point short of a three-way tie for third place, and captured an honorable mention. Its size was 8x10. As one of the judges put it, "art is not sold by the pound."

Next month a complete listing, showing the scores of all participating clubs, will be published. The December judging was held at Oklahoma City and was sponsored by the Oklahoma CC.

For full particulars as to how your club can enter the International Club Print Competition, write Robert L. Lauer, 807 South 14th Street, Milwaukee 4, Wisconsin.

"In the Heart of the Vieux Carre'" by Louis P. Ganucheau, Jr. Judging of the October International Club Print Competition was held in New Orleans, Louisiana. Meeting place of the Delta CC is in the Presbytere, a State Museum next to famous St. Louis Cathedral. St. Louis Cathedral is the heart of the Vieux Carre' (Old City), and is pictured here through the lacy iron grillwork of the Pontalbo building.

News of the Pictorial Division

George Green, Associate Editor

I don't remember who said it and I'm too tired to check but someone once uttered a mouthful with this excerpt: "As ye sow—ye shall reap." And that can be applied to anything and everything Joe Human does.

If you were observant you would have noticed the statement "I'm too tired to check." And therein lies the crux of a great many things we do; especially in photography. This wonderful, exacting, stimulating, modern magic has many facets which are supposed to relax the tenseness of a day's work. What we create in the darkroom should be so encompassing and exacting that we have no thoughts for anything but perfection. But, unfortunately, most of us are too tired to attempt to achieve that goal.

Why does a person's work change? Because the majority are average human beings. Their hobby is only a pasttime while it can offer amusement and entertainment. When it passes those phases it immediately becomes a chore; and most chores are bothersome and performed quickly. The very nature of such performance is such to prevent perfection. And that's why so many entries in salons and club competitions are so shockingly amateurish.

Of course, I could look at myself and pointingly ask where I get off with this sort of an article. After all there has been many a column I've dashed off to meet a deadline . . . and then wondered how I could have turned out such work. Haste, in photography, very rarely makes the ribbon class. It takes and demands an inner feeling of complete relaxation and concentration to do anything creative.

By the same token it requires a competent analyst to look over the finished product and offer constructive criticism. The human equation of routine becomes commonplace because a deepening rut is so easily applied to anything which remains unpraised. Only by satisfying the ego is one conscious of the groove he is making—either upward or downward.

Just like I'm pulled-up every so often by my critics, you require the same treatment if your darkroom endeavors haven't brought you results and acclaim. To think that this is all yours free because you are a member of the Pictorial Division! You can have your prints analyzed by the director of the Personalized Print Analysis, J. Elwood Armstrong. All you have to do is make a 5x7 or 8x10 plus a contact print (the first two sizes may be cropped in any manner you desire but the contact must be of the entire negative). Include a brief statement of the idea or purpose behind the picture and whether it was taken for the purpose of competition, etc. Give all pertinent technical data.

Send the prints by first class mail, including return postage and mailing label. Be sure to print your name and address on the back of each print plus the picture's title. Send them to J. Elwood Armstrong, 17402 Monica, Detroit 21, Michigan.

The Award of Merit

Changes in standings since the last list was published are as follows:

New One Star Exhibitors
Simon Goldsmith, Jackson Heights, N. Y.
Arthur F. Smethurst, South Orange, N. J.
Philip Solomon, West Hartford, Conn.
B. K. Mukerjee, Calcutta, India

Advanced from Two Star to Three Star
Charles L. Wilson, San Diego, Cal.
O. E. Romig, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Advanced from Three to Four Star
G. Thomas, Bangalore, India

If you feel that you are eligible for the Award of Merit, submit proof of your exhibition record to Glenn E. Dahlby, Director. Awards are retroactive and all Pictorial Division members are eligible, without charge.

A. Lynne Paschall, Associate Editor

If I read my calendar correctly, the month is now January and it is high time we were out taking snow pictures, to say nothing of getting next year's Christmas cards ready. Or are you one of those indoor sportsmen who is afraid of getting his feet wet and doesn't like winter anyway?

I know a promising beginner who submitted his first effort at snow photography to an expert for criticism and advice. The answer he received was as cold as the picture itself. The would-be expert pointed out a few minor defects and then said, ". . . but after all, it is only another snow scene and they are too old and too commonplace to get into a salon these days."

Of course, snow is old, everything in this world is old, but there are still new revelations and new beauties for anyone who cares to look for them. If a really fine snow picture fails to make a salon, then judges have fallen to a much lower level than I think they have. And as to being new, there is nothing new about the kind of cheesecake that is so much in vogue now. We used to get that kind of art in exchange for cigarette coupons, back in the days when cigarettes were not considered quite respectable either.

And that reminds me: As I write these lines (in late October) the Detroit Convention is still fresh in my mind and I can't keep from talking about it. One day while I was waiting in the lobby of the Book-Cadillac, I fell into conversation with Franklin I. Jordan (well known to the reading public as "Pop") and Roy McAdams, a prospective member of PSA. Roy was expressing his distaste for a certain type of photographic magazines that are interested only in the dollar and care nothing about real art and decency. "If you are interested in a magazine that devotes all its energies to advancing photography and doesn't even try to make a profit," I ventured, "let me recommend PSA JOURNAL." And Pop SEZ: "Now, you've said something!"

The activities to which we have been calling attention in this column have been in great demand for program material in recent months, and the directors have been busy filling orders, so all the services will be continued.

The first man I met in Detroit was Sten Anderson. We had never seen each other before and met quite by accident. Sten was full of enthusiasm for the Portfolian Club movement and he had written a very fine article for this column. It explains very clearly what is to be gained by forming a Portfolian club, and we are planning to publish it just as it is, next month, but if you contemplate organizing a club do not wait but write to him at once.

I looked everywhere for Fred Fix and had about given him up when, on the last day, he laid his hand on my shoulder and called me by name. It's nice to have people in PSA remember you. Fred said that American Exhibits have been very popular and most of the shows are booked up for months ahead. And that's a better recommendation than anything I could write.

He did have some good news for program committees, however. The Standard Oil Company has furnished some remarkably fine documentary photographs that tell the story of America today. There are many pictures of human interest as well as a few of technical installations, and all are done in a pictorial manner difficult to improve upon. The photographs are the work of several men and have been assembled and edited by Roy Stryker.

The exhibit is divided into three sections which may be had separately or as a unit. Any section would serve as material for an evening's program for a camera club, or make an interesting display for the club room. These pictures are available for immediate booking and only the transportation costs need be paid by the club, there is no service charge.

Philip Maples appeared at the meeting of the Pictorial Division and let the Recorded Lectures speak for themselves. He had a tape recorder on the platform and played the introductory paragraph of each lecture for us. Phil is arranging some new distribution centers across the country in order to expedite delivery of recorded programs.

William Hutchinson, who arranges the Print Circuits for Camera Clubs, did not get to Detroit but he wrote a letter saying he was launching a new circuit in which the following clubs are cooperating:

Carney's Point CC, Penn's Grove, N. J.
Catawba Valley CC, Hickory, N. C.
Topeka CC, Topeka, Kans.
Bartlesville CC, Bartlesville, Okla.
Griffin CC, Griffin, Ga.
Central Florida CC, St. Petersburg, Fla.
Columbus YMCA CC, Columbus, Ohio
Ft. Steuben CC, Steubenville, Ohio.
Commentator: Dr. William F. Small, APSA.

If your camera club has never taken part in one of these circuits, you had better get it started right away. The club needs only three prints but have them ready when you make application so that they can be shipped in as soon as Bill calls for them. Remember the other seven clubs are champing at the bit and ready to go.

I looked for Dennis Anderson, to ask him how the Portfolio of Portfolios is coming along, and his name was announced at the Pictorial Division Meeting, but he was delayed somewhere along the way and I never did get to meet him. Neither did I find Henry McKay who finds out-of-town judges for our picture contests. Have you tried that service yet?

The International Portfolios

COL. CHARLES J. ("JOE") PERRY, Associate Editor

From the four corners of the earth, to the four corners of the earth, we extend to each of you our heartfelt greetings for a most prosperous and Happy New Year.

The 'Internationals' bear proof that pictorial photography is unhampered by global distances. Pictorialism adheres to no specific creed or sect and embraces in its folds all races of the earth and all stations of life. Our portfolios constitute the common ground upon which serious pictorialists of the world gather for friendly exchange of comment and technical 'know-how' information.

At the commencement of this New Year we extend to all a warm greeting of fellowship, with a sincere wish that 1952 will be the year in which your photographic hopes will ripen into fruition and your every desire will reach fulfillment.

As we look toward the year ahead with anticipation, the encouragement received during the Detroit Convention is yet ringing in our ears. The personal contact and greetings from our friends of Mexico, Cuba, and Canada were indeed encouraging, and we pass along to our American membership the felicitations so warmly and enthusiastically extended to us.

There are still vacancies in the International Portfolios for qualified Americans. If you want a new viewpoint, an honest comment, a warm grip of fellowship—it is here for the taking.

The American Portfolios

MISS EVELYN ROBBINS, Associate Editor

Chirps From the Robbins

I wish each of you could have been at the Convention in Detroit! The gang there did a mighty fine job.

Just imagine a Portfolio Room with plenty of tables to spread out the portfolios to look at them comfortably—and plenty of chairs. You could sit and browse through the portfolios or chat with friends! If you walked into the room at any time, you were sure to meet portfolio friends you had met previously, as well as others by their name tags. You were certainly made royally welcome; and especially by our Director of the American Portfolios, Eldridge Christhilf, Hon. PSA.

I'm sure there must be many many more cases like this one, but I was personally fortunate enough to meet, there in the Portfolio Room, a PSA member who did not belong to a portfolio. In the course of the conversation he divulged the fact that he had little or no contact with a camera club of any kind. What was the answer to his problem? PORTFOLIOS! Naturally!

We took him around to inspect all the portfolios, explained them to him in full detail, and introduced him to our Director. Before he left the room, we had him signed up for two portfolios. Today, I received a note from him—he has just joined the third! He is quite excited about them, and justly so. He is located in an area where he needs them badly, and will get a lot out of them—both in photographic know-how, as well as friendship with people who have a mutual love for a hobby.

If there is anything in that old saying, "Practice what you preach," then I am now qualified to "preach" the praises of the Portfolio Activity and urge each and everyone of you to join—first, the Pictorial Division; then, the portfolios. It seems I returned home from the Convention with memberships in five portfolios . . . it was only three before Detroit!

Random Thoughts

ELDRIDGE R. CHRISTHILF, Hon.PSA, APSA

Detroit is behind us, and New York lies ahead. From the viewpoint of the Portfolio Room, the Detroit Convention was a decided success. We had, as promised, a very large room—the Pan-American Room—where there was ample space to meet and browse thru the various portfolios that had been brought on for the Convention. The room was a busy place at all hours, even when important programs were under way elsewhere in the hotel.

This year we carried out our avowed intention of foregoing all programs and sticking close to the Portfolio Room. The only time we were away from the Room from 9 AM until 11 PM was to take time out for lunch at noon and dinner in the evening. In spite of the fact that we were there at all other hours there were quite a few who registered in the Portfolio Room with whom we never did succeed in catching up.

For group attendance the honors go to Pictorial Portfolio #19 and to Nature Portfolio #1, each of whom had 8 members in attendance. From Pictorial #19 there were:

John R. Hogan, Hon.PSA, FPSA, Philadelphia, Pa.
Franklin L. Purrington, Wheaton, Illinois
J. Stanley Nixon, Kenmore, New York
Col. Charles J. Perry, El Paso, Texas
Evelyn M. Robbins, Springfield, Illinois
Fred L. Fyle, Wabash, Indiana and Biloxi, Mississippi
Edith M. Royky, Sioux City, Iowa
Doris Martha Weber, APSA, Cleveland, Ohio

The group representing Nature Portfolio #1 consisted of:

William Cottingham, Winfield, Kansas
Ray Miess, APSA, Milwaukee, Wisconsin
E. Curtis Lugg, Sioux Falls, South Dakota
Cy Coleman, Detroit, Michigan
Helen Albertson, Sioux City, Iowa
Belle McMillen, Lansing, Michigan
Arthur E. Anderson, Chesterton, Indiana
Lou Gibson, FPSA, Rochester, New York

The Commentators Conference was well attended and many interesting ideas and facts were presented. Details of that will be given later either in the Digest or thru the Portfolio Notebooks. One of the outstanding things of the Conference was the bonus that is to be made available to those Portfolio Circles which complete their circuits ahead of schedule. The details of this bonus will be given elsewhere in the JOURNAL, either in this issue or in an early one. So, be prepared, do everything possible to speed up your portfolio so that you can benefit.

The names of many who are active in the portfolios either as Commentators or portfolio members are on the Honors list this year. Fellowships went to:

F. R. Altwater—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolios
J. Elwood Armstrong—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolio and member, Star Exhibitor Portfolios
Axel Bahnsen—member, Star Exhibitor Portfolios
Frank E. Fenner—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolios
H. Lou Gibson—Commentator, Nature Portfolio
Barbara Green—Commentator, PSA Pictorial Portfolio
John G. Muldet—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolio and member, Pictorial Portfolio
H. W. Wagner—member, Star Exhibitor Portfolio.

Associateships went to the following:

Henry W. Barker—member, Pictorial Portfolio
Dr. C. F. Cochran—member, Pictorial Portfolio
Gretchen H. Goughnour—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolio
Larry D. Hanson—Circle Secretary, Pictorial Portfolio
George Horn—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolio
Herbert Jackson—member, Pictorial Portfolios
Lee Jenkins—member, Pictorial and Nature Portfolios
Cortland F. Luce—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolio and member, Star Exhibitor Portfolio
Herbert F. Paschel—member, Pictorial Portfolio
Walter J. Pietschmann—member, Pictorial Portfolio
Paul J. Wolfe—Commentator, Pictorial Portfolio and member, Star Exhibitor Portfolio.

To each of these go our congratulations.

JUNGLE RIVER W. G. Clayton

Portfolio Medal Award

We are pleased to announce another Portfolio Medal Award winner—this time William G. Clayton of Grand Island, Nebraska. His print, "Jungle River," reproduced in the Digest this month, had travelled in Pictorial Portfolio #29. It was later accepted and hung in an international salon.

The winning picture was taken with an Auto Rollei with an f/3.5 Tessar lens in February 1950 about six miles in the jungle from the Parinam River in Surinam, S. A. Bill, in writing about the picture, says:

"We were riding back from the Bauxite mine and had just crossed a bridge and I noticed a bush Negro paddling his canoe upstream. I asked the driver to stop, and I dashed out to get a movie of the native. In so doing I noticed this scene down at the end of the bridge and paused long enough for a picture or two."

The part that Bill did not tell is that he and Mrs. Clayton, suffering from a severe attack of "wanderlust" boarded a Norwegian freighter and became vagabonds for five full weeks. They flew from the frigid winter of Nebraska to New Orleans and embarked on their journey which took then to Kingston, Jamaica; Port-au-Prince, Haiti; Dominican Republic; St. Thomas; Dutch Guiana, where the picture was taken; Trinidad and points south. Bill kept his cameras busy on this trip for he came back with 2,000 feet of 16mm movie film, took 150 color slides and over 350 black and white exposures.

Comments by a Commentator

DR. CARROL C. TURNER, APSA,
Commentator, Portfolio #60

What are my comments as a Commentator? As a member of one of the early Pictorial Portfolios, and at present Commentator for #60, several observations come to mind. First, as to the overall purpose of the portfolio.

Naturally when a group of people are working together toward one objective—namely, to make better pictures—a feeling of camaraderie develops and as the different circuits arrive and are passed on (sometimes late) to the next member of the circuit, interests other than photographic spring into existence. How old is Bill, and where did he spend his recent vacation? John and Mildred have a new arrival in the family, and sometimes a snap shot of said new arrival (diapers up) is appended to a long dissertation on said new arrival and pasted into the book of comments. Don has left us, as his new job required a transfer to parts outside the geographical limits of the circuit. Charles and Mary made some new Christmas cards—a sample of said card also pasted into the book of comments, and how do we like 'em. Ella's three year old had a cold the last time the circuit arrived and she did not have time to make a print for the collection section. These and sundry other personal interests appear; and, as aforesaid, are aimed at developing and nurturing a feeling of mutual sociability among the circuit members. This is all fine and is commendable in cultivating a feeling of intimacy in the circuit.

But what of the true aims of the portfolio? Would it not be more helpful to the group composing the portfolio to limit comments in the notebook to individual photographic problems, with which each of us is confronted—from the time we make an exposure to the completion of the print in the darkroom? Each one of us is in a position to offer helpful suggestions from our own experiences with the same problems and our final solutions or partial solutions of these problems.

My next comment would refer to the dilatory tactics of some of the members of the circuit (and I am just as guilty as any) in acknowledging receipt of the circuit and in keeping it bottled up longer than the prescribed five days allotted to each member. For the convenience of the others in the circuit, it is urgent to expedite its manipulations while in one's hands as promptly and diligently as possible. Realizing that on occasion there are unavoidable delays in holding up the circuit, it behooves each of us to take an evening out as soon as the circuit is received, have a print ready for the collecting section, take care of the comment section, take your folder and print out of the removal section, and get the circuit on the move to the next member. This criticism may seem superfluous, but we are all guilty at times of stalling the circuit with unnecessary and avoidable delays.

My last comments are in reference to the overall quality of the prints. Since most members of portfolios have, or hope to develop, salon ambitions, more time could be allotted to composition. Some people seem to possess an aptitude for a good composition by nature. Their pictures are well balanced, simple in arrangement, have a well placed center of interest and depict a mood or story. To most of us, however, composition comes the hard way, and is acquired only by long experience, observing the work of others well trained in composition, and by reading publications and articles on the subject. Anyone versed with the use of a camera can shoot a scene or a situation, but not everyone can produce a picture.

As to print quality, a good percentage of the prints are remarkably clean and well executed technically. There are some still coming through that are flat, lack snap and have an overall grayness, or muddiness. To these I would suggest:

1. Shorter projection exposure.
2. Longer print development—even up to five minutes, provided that
3. The developer is fresh and is not too cold. Cold developer yields flat prints—and
4. A red safety light about an E. K. #2 over the developing tray. If you don't believe an amber safety light will fog prints during long development, try this experiment. Place a coin on a piece of sensitized paper and leave it under your amber safe light about six to eight minutes. Then develop this piece of paper and see what you have.
5. Fit your paper to your negative. Except with those experienced sufficiently with print manipulation, a #2 paper will not yield a satisfactory print from a thin negative.

And now, having drained off some of the mental pus as "Comments by a Commentator," I seen my duty and I done it. S'long 'till another time.

"Star Dust" *

ROY E. LINDAHL, General Secretary, Star Exhibitor Portfolios

The problem of sharpness is a real one and nearly as controversial as the previous discussion on Photography vs Art. That it is closely integrated is hardly questionable as there is requirement for as many degrees of sharpness in our pictures as there are moods and type of subject matter. Likewise, many factors affect our results and more of these are brought out in the following letter by another member.

"Getting back to John's listing, he completely overlooked a tremendous factor—the advantage of interchangeable lenses in the larger cameras. Naturally, the longer the lens the more critical the focus. This calls for experience. I thoroughly agree with him that the twin-lens jobs have great depth, but they have many horrible disadvantages and I do not bother with them. The main objection, as I see it, is the distortion. Several years ago someone hit the top with several beach scenes, actually, buildings in the distance were bent! I am accustomed to vertical or horizontal lines unless I am seeking something unusual.

"When I use a 5x7 I have a choice of a 4½"—6"—8¼" or 12" Goerz lens. To me, this is ideal—when I find the ideal angle I choose the proper lens instead of moving up to fill the ground glass. Furthermore, I finish with several negatives not a drawer full mixed with indecision. Axel will vouch—I made two negatives, one vertical and the other horizontal. From these two shapes I will sell prints for years to come. Another great advantage—I can do any amount of correctional work without any worry. Frequently, I intensify and reduce a negative locally and pencil, dye or etch.

"Back to cameras again, John, how many times have you looked at a negative and wished for a fraction of film on one side or the other? I do not have that problem, as it is always there if I feel the need for it—this alone would convince me that the large camera is desirable. To wind up the discussion of cameras I suggest that, regardless of what camera one uses, stick to only one—and you will get far better results."

Another member questions the desirability of extreme sharpness in all pictures as he writes: "Do we get variety in the way of discussions in this notebook? One time it is about photography as an art and now it is how to help John get sharp pictures via the large camera route. I agree with a lot that has gone before, except PH's statement that negative size has practically nothing to do with the question. Theoretically, that may be true, but I have noticed that it does not work out that way. It seems that, no matter how sharp the negative can be made, there is some loss of definition in the enlarging process somewhat in proportion to the enlarging ratio, but for some reason or other, I do not seem to be as definition-conscious as a lot of people I know. I came into photography while there was still a lot of good soft-focus work being done—did a little of it myself and still like it when it is well done and appropriate to the subject matter.

"I do think that your straightforward analysis of the correlationship between film size and sharpness based on the prints in this portfolio overlooks am important item. First off, these prints were not chosen for inclusion in this portfolio because they were the sharpest that could be produced by a film of the size that was used. Too many other variables enter into the sharpness of these prints, variables about which you have no knowledge, yet variables which should definitely be taken into account. Perhaps one of the most important of these variables has to do with whether the camera was hand held or on a tripod."

The following communication was recently received from PSAer W. J. Schubert, a past president of The Camera Club of New York City. It contains so many valuable points, we are reproducing it here in full:

"I noticed Mr. Hogan's letter on page (2)71 of the November JOURNAL regarding lens resolution, and as this is a subject I've done some work on, and as I enjoy talking shop, here goes:

"Our company (the Fairchild Camera & Instrument Corporation) at one time considered building amateur cameras, and one of the first specifications I set up was that they should be capable of producing razor sharp negatives. My thought was that where diffusion was wanted, the user could introduce it to his heart's content by any of several methods, but that maximum sharpness in our cameras would be a 'must'.

"Our work developed the fact that razor sharp prints depend on an astonishingly large number of things besides the camera; in other words, print sharpness is not a matter of fulfilling one condition superlatively well; it is rather a case of hitting a high average in fulfilling a considerable number of conditions. In fact, so many conditions are involved that they will have to be captioned and numbered to keep track of them all. According to my experience, these conditions effect sharpness:

1. The lens-shutter combination obviously must deliver high average sharpness at the focal plane over the whole film area.
2. The camera must be sufficiently accurate and rigid to hold the film within the lens' depth of focus. (This depth of focus is much narrower than is generally realized.)
3. Subject matter must be such as will utilize the sharpness.
4. Focussing, of course, must be really accurate. Focussing by parallax does the best job. Also, when focussing visually on the groundglass, the photographer will nearly always focus a trifle too close.
5. Focus-shift: If the focussing is done on a groundglass, the lens must be stopped down before final focus, unless a symmetrical lens is being used. Most unsymmetrical lenses, such as the Tessar construction for example, will shift focus slightly as they are stopped down.
6. Aperture Setting: Every lens has its point of greatest resolution, and this is usually about two stops down from the full aperture. An f/4.5 lens, for

AN INVITATION

This is an invitation to every PSA member to participate in the PSA American Portfolios.

Enrollments are now being received in the following specialized groups:

PSA Pictorial Portfolios
PSA Portrait Portfolios
PSA Miniature Portfolios
PSA Control Process Portfolios
PSA Star Exhibitor Portfolios
(For PSA Award of Merit Winners)
PSA Nature Portfolios

For information concerning any of the foregoing activities and for enrollment blanks, write to the Director of the PSA American Portfolios, Eldridge R. Christhilf, Hon. PSA, APSA, Suite 406, 800 Davis Street, Evanston, Illinois.

example, will usually deliver its sharpest resolution at about f/8. Also, when we get much beyond f/16 diffraction begins to bring in some over-all softening.

7. Camera Shake during exposure must be held so far down that it will not result in blurring of more than 1/200th inch in the finished print. (In my experience, camera shake is more serious than is ordinarily realized; I have been surprised a couple of times when what I had thought was a "soft" lens delivered excellent resolution when the exposure of the resolution chart was made with an electronic flash of 1/10,000th second, or faster.)
8. Film: Personally, I have never been able to get really sharp enlargements from negatives made on fast emulsions; I get my best results on the medium speed or fine grain films. Maybe this is just personal opinion, because there is not too much difference in the resolution claimed by makers between the different emulsions.
9. Exposure must be sufficient, but both over- and under-exposure must be avoided.
10. Processing: Development must be sufficient, but not excessive. I personally have gotten sharpest results by holding both the exposure and the development to the minimum that would produce a negative that would make a good print on #2 contrast paper. Also, I have gotten best results when developer, rinse, fix and wash water can all be held within a temperature range not exceeding 2° F. plus or minus. Even and fairly rapid drying also tends toward better negatives.

"If you have maintained that aforesaid high average of performance so far, let us now make the print:

11. Enlarger Lens: Contrary to general impression, our enlarger lens must also be sharp, for our print is going to contain the sum total of the residual abberrations from both the taking and the enlarger lenses; abberrations in one won't offset those in the other.
12. Easel: We must level up our easel so that it holds all areas of our paper in the lens' focal plane.
13. Don't forget to check focus again after the lens has been stopped down for the exposure.
14. Also, wherever possible, use one of the mid-apertures so as to at least be near the lens point of sharpest resolution.
15. Enlarger vibration will hurt as much as camera shake. It is surprising how much vibration occurs in buildings when a heavy truck or streetcar passes, even at some little distance.
16. Paper processing must also, of course, be done according to Hoyle.

"Yes, I thoroughly enjoy talking shop. These comments aren't intended to be discouraging—rather they present a challenge to see how sharp a print we can turn out. And a final thought—if you have ever produced one sharp print with your present equipment, then the equipment is all right!"

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By the Editor

Imitate to Create

I was surprised and challenged in reading an article in a recent copy of the Ansconian to find the writer actually recommending that photographers imitate the work of others. But the longer I thought about his comments, the more sense they seemed to make.

Here are some of the comments Mills Steele made in his article "Women Should Be Elegant": "At the outset some photographers may find it difficult to develop a distinctive style of portraiture. If this happened to me I would not have the slightest hesitancy about adapting another's style to my requirements. . . . Some photographers worry too much about originality. They place entirely too much emphasis on the value of novelty . . . undue preoccupation with individuality in one's work has done a great deal to produce a crop of eccentric fakes.

"These attempts to be different solely for the sake of being different, are carrying art and photography away from tradition. To me tradition is our heritage of knowledge and experience. . . . It might not be too much to say that the creative master is not a success until he is imitated."

What then, is creative work? How can we create if we are not different? All of us have heard it said that there is nothing new in the world. What appears to be new, then, is the application of our knowledge of past situations to the present. Creativeness is a result of having a fresh viewpoint on an old subject.

It is not easy to imitate. Pure imitation is very difficult. If you were asked to imitate a picture, the chances are that you could not do it. For you would make some changes from the original. Some of the real "you" would shine through. You would not be imitating only—you would be creating a picture.

Artists, writers, architects, and most others in creative professions, keep a file of ideas. They may be pictures that others have done. They may be words which set off a chain of ideas. They may be rough sketches. But they are ideas.

Maybe you keep a file of salon pictures which you can use as starters for pictures of your own. Many photographers do. They imitate, maybe, but in imitating they create pictures of their own. For they change the elements of the picture, the arrangement of the elements, the lighting—but most of all they approach the picture they make with some individual difference in attitude. And they make a picture which is truly their own.

In summarizing, Mills Steele said: "Assimilate all you can through study and observation. Make your camera say things in your own way and you will soon discover that you have developed a style that is yours and yours only—as individual as your fingerprint."

Start now to develop your own creative abilities through imitation. Let your self shine through—and your pictures will be truly your own.

PSA Recorded Lecture Program

The Recorded Lecture Program of the Pictorial Division offers the following programs for your club.

No. 1. An Analysis of Recognized Salon Prints by Ragnar Hedenvall, APSA
No. 2. Commentary on Recognized Salon Prints by Morris Gurrie
No. 3. Outdoor Photography by D. Ward Pease, FPSA
No. 4. Still Life by Ann Pilger Dewey, APSA, Hon. PSA.
No. 5. New Prints for Old by Barbara Green, APSA
SPECIAL Photography of the Nude by P. H. Oelman, FPSA

A deposit of $25.00 should accompany an order. A service charge is made for each Lecture. The SPECIAL costs $10.00 and should be ordered directly from Mr. Oelman. For clubs which are members of PSA but are not affiliated with the PD the charge is $6.50. Clubs which are affiliated with the PD will be charged $5.00. Clubs or groups not members of PSA will be quoted prices on request to the Director.

For Nos. 1 to 5 order from Philip B. Maples, Director, Recorded Lecture Program, 29 Spring Street, Brockport, New York.

For the SPECIAL please contact: P. H. Oelman, FPSA, 2505 Moorman Avenue, Cincinnati 6, Ohio.

Contests for All

Do Divisions of PSA fulfill adequately the desires of their members for contests and competitions in their specialized fields?

Speaking only for the Color Division, we can say that the enthusiasm for competitions has led to the development of four different contests available to all members either individually or through camera clubs. Most of these contests are well-established and are proving very popular. The enrollment in several has more than doubled in the past two years.

If you are not taking part in any of these competitions at this time, we suggest you check over the following list and get full information on any contest which meets your requirements.

Color Slides

International Slide Competition For Individuals. This competition consists of a series of five contests each season. Four slides may be entered in each contest. Medals and ribbons are awarded, but the chief value of this competition lies in the written criticism of each slide by the judges. Deadline dates are the 20th of September, November, January, March and May. The judging points are rotated. No entry fee for Color Division members, non-members pay $1.00 for the series. For entry form write to Charles B. McKee, APSA, 5030 Del Rio Drive, Sacramento 18, California.

National Club Slide Competition. Competing clubs are divided into two classes—A and B. Five competitions in each group are held each season. Deadline dates are the 20th of October, December, February, April, and June. Each club enters 6 slides in each contest. There are prizes for clubs, and individuals as well as season grand prizes. No entry fee is charged for Color Division clubs, other PSA clubs pay $4, non-PSA clubs pay $6. Judging points are rotated. For information and entry form write to Merle S. Ewell, APSA, 1422 West 48th Street, Los Angeles, California.

Color Prints

Color Print Competition For Individuals. This competition is composed of contests in November, February and May. Prints by any color process are eligible but must have been made by the individual submitting them. Cups and ribbons are awarded and each print receives a written criticism. There is no entry fee required of Color Division members, non-members pay $1 per season, or 50 cents for each contest. For information and entry form write to Warren H. Savary, APSA, RFD #2, Box 221, Plainfield, New Jersey.

Stereo

Competition for Stereo Workers. This competition consists of a series of three contests each season; four stereos may be entered in each. Medals and ribbons are awarded. Deadline dates are 20th of November, February and May. No entry fee for Color Division members, but postage for return of stereos must be included with the slides. For information and entry forms, write G. W. Blaha, APSA, 4211 Harvey Avenue, Western Springs, Ill.

In most contests, entries can be made in any one of the three or more competitions during the season, but in the club slide competition entries for the complete season are encouraged because cumulative scores are kept and annual prizes awarded for the top scoring club in each class.

In addition to competitions, many other opportunities are offered for appraisal of color slides, color prints and stereo slides through circuits and slide study groups for both clubs and individuals.—G. F. J.

"Oil and Water?"

The most discussed problem confronting camera club officers these days is the alarming drop in the number of prints being submitted since the admission of color slides. Most of them decry "color" as the cause.

Yet, to blame this decline on "color" is merely generalizing, a sport generally indulged in by die-hards who refuse to recognize change as progress.

Their chief argument is that, whereas monochrome prints require great skill and multiple hours of work, "color" is only "snap-shooting." These are words of the uninformed.

Searching deeper for the probable causes, we would find that the increasing shift to color photography by former print makers is only a normal result of two basic conditions, to wit: A desire to keep abreast of the times, to progress with photography; or an admission of the inability of the member to continue production of satisfying pictures in a monochrome medium.

The first condition is a healthy reaction in an era where science is achieving so much so fast.

The second may be caused by any of a number of contributing factors. "Time" could very well be the prime reason. With the advent of so many new and interesting diversions within our reach, most of us have discovered that the day is not as long as it was.

Perhaps the increased cost of producing pictorial prints is greater than the current print-making budget will allow.

The tendency of judges to find as little as possible of merit in each print may seem to some, insufficient reward for the effort involved.

Quite possibly the average camera club member wishes to make pictures the whole family, or his friends, can enjoy. How many of our non-photographic relatives or friends will look at prize-winning prints and appreciate them?

Whatever the reasons, more and more print makers are turning to color. This indicates that they are still dominated by that indefinable urge to create beautiful pictures.

It should follow, then, that if they were consistent winners with pictorial prints, they will develop into color pictorialists having the added advantage of the technical experience necessary to all good photography. They will learn to create color, just as they learned to create pictorial prints. They will become greater photographers.

If clubs do not progress with color, if the die-hards persist in belittling color, they will be the losers.

Color enthusiasts are realizing that, today, it is their interest, their dues, and their winning of honors in color that keep most dual clubs operating, and they are beginning to rebel.

New organizations devoted exclusively to color are being formed by many.

One accredited international exhibition, heretofore jointly sponsored by a color and a B&W group, plans divorce because color entrance fees have had to finance the print section in the past two exhibits. Others may follow.

Any cleavage in groups with allied interests is bad. It will be unfortunate if continued shortsightedness by the few should widen the breech.

However, there is no loss without gain. Perhaps the die-hards will learn, through loss, tolerance for advancement. Surely those who accept both schools of photographic thought will gain a better understanding of pictorialism through continued demonstrations of creative monochrome technique translated into creative Color.

More Information Coming

So many favorable responses were received to our September 1951 special color slide feature in PSA JOURNAL, that we immediately made plans with the cooperation of the PSA Publications Committee and Fred Quellmalz, the JOURNAL editor, for two Supplements in 1952. One of these is planned for March, and the second will appear in September.

More information on color is the plan. To accomplish this we will need more members who will write their ideas and experiences for JOURNAL publication. The Color Division has an Editorial Committee which is contacting members and gathering information constantly.

If you have an editorial inspiration on color photography, contact one of the following: EAST: Paul J. Wolf, APSA, 354 Fort Washington Avenue, Hawthorne, New York; CENTRAL: H. G. Mitchell, 7455 North Greenview Avenue, Chicago 26, Illinois; WEST: Merle S. Ewell, APSA, 1422 West 48th Street, Los Angeles 37, California; GENERAL: Karl A. Baumgaertel, APSA, 353-31st Avenue, San Francisco 21, California.

Look at and Study Pictures

I wonder how many of us really study the pictures we see, and not just look at them.

If we are to improve our own work, we must study the work of others. This has been done for years by artists who always took the time and trouble to study the old masters.

I have found that when I look at a photography book, I get so much more out of it when I try to study the pictures. Take one of the pictures and see if it is pleasing to you and if it can be improved by cropping. Much to your surprise you may find that you can improve on it. By following this practice you develop a subconscious feeling for composition, and learn what really makes a picture click. Many of us are not blessed with an eye for composition, but don't be discouraged, as you can acquire this important requirement if you will study pictures.

When we are attending a contest we should listen to the judges' comments, and see if we agree. If they say it is good, observe what makes it pleasing and remember the picture. We can always pick up pointers we did not know before. In this way we get to recognize what gives a slide the necessary punch, and what makes other slides just average.

Therefore, by looking at all sorts of pictures at contests, exhibitions, in books, we learn whether a scene is worth taking or not, since in this manner we are developing what is known as a "photographic eye." Once we do this all that we have to do next is plan our composition, lighting and exposure.

It is the man behind the camera that counts, and not the value of the equipment that he is using. Study every picture you see, and pretty soon, much to your surprise, it will reflect in your work.—EDWARD HERCHE in New York Color Slide Club's Monthly Bulletin, "Rainbow".

Color Reproduction

"Is it possible to get an exact color reproduction of a color transparency which seems to match perfectly the subject photographed?"

This question was presented recently to W. K. Raxworthy, the Color Division technical authority on color processes. His answer follows:

From strictly theoretical considerations involving the mathematics of present day color processes, and from the present state of our knowledge concerning our visual sensations, it must be admitted at the start that no color process is capable of yielding exact color reproduction of the subject, and this holds for both transparencies and prints. In the case of color prints, the main reason for this is the faulty spectral absorption characteristics of the dyes involved, together with a somewhat inadequate visual response which varies with each individual. Prints which are good to some, are only mediocre to others, and the entire question is perhaps a matter of personal preference by visual examination and by our mental conception of what we think the original subject "looked" or should "look like."

The dyes are the best obtainable at the moment, but they fall considerably short of the theoretical requirements. The exception is the yellow, which fulfills the requirements to a remarkable degree. If the magentas and cyans did as well, practically all of the headaches in color reproduction would disappear. Fortunately, methods have been devised to offset much of the faulty absorption characteristics of the dyes.

The appraisal of color is an extremely complicated affair, and such attempts, visually, between a transparency and the original subject, or between the transparency and the corresponding reflection print, should be made with this fact in mind. All color prints will record the subject to a high degree providing the requirements of lighting, exposure, etc., have been met, and this record is constant. But our visual conception is not constant and will vary according to mood and with our mental idea of what we think the original "looked like."

A "true transparency reproduction" is therefore impossible for the reasons previously mentioned, and in addition, because of the manner in which the respective materials are viewed. In the case of transparencies, this is by transmitted light, whereas the corresponding print is viewed by reflected light and the two conditions are dissimilar. Unless the viewing light source is the same in each case, a considerable error in judgment is likely to result. A similar situation will result when viewing two "identical" transparencies or prints, each under different illumination. As a matter of fact, some of the colors may be altered completely if the required spectral components are weak or missing from the light source, as is true of some fluorescent and arc lights.

I believe the reader can now see why apparent or real color differences will always exist between transparency and subject, or between transparency and print. This, however, is no serious drawback, since each can be acceptable despite their point for point differences when critically compared. Furthermore, our visual and mental equipment is such that we can make appropriate adjustment in all but the most obvious cases. In a good color print, however, the differences between it and the transparency should preferably be no greater than between the latter and the original subject.

Club Slide Contest Expands

With an increase of almost 20 per cent in enrollment in the National Club Slide Competition for 1951–1952, the division of the competition into three classes, of approximately 40 clubs each, instead of the two classes as in the past, is being considered at the time of this writing. The classes would be Class AA, Class A, and Class B. Since a maximum of six slides can be entered by each club, this new classification will make the handling of the bi-monthly competition by a club somewhat less cumbersome and will give more clubs valuable experience in handling a competition. The clubs entered this season were polled on suggestions for action to take as a result of the substantial expansion in the competition. A preliminary tally of the poll indicates that the clubs favored increase in number of classes, rather than reduction in number of slides to be entered by each club.

New Record Set

With over 130 camera clubs enrolled in the National Club Slide Competition, a substantial new record has been set, according to a report from Merle S. Ewell, APSA, supervisor of the Competition. Last year, 108 clubs were entered. Five contests are held annually in October, December, February, April and June. No entry fee is charged clubs belonging to the Color Division.

GET SET UP . . . for a Happy New Year

The Kodak BULLETIN

For Taking . . .

Lighting often makes the difference between a good picture and an outstanding one; ease in control makes a big difference to you. If you really want to enjoy handling light, you'll need a versatile Kodak Vari-Beam Clamplight (left) or Standlight. With either, you dial the light you want, from high intensity spot to diffuse flood. No. 2 Photofloods in big 12-inch reflectors give you all the light you want.

Action shots and pictures in a hurry call for flash. For Kodak Flash Cameras or other internally synchronized types, the Kodak Flasholder, Model B, with Flashguard, accepts all midget lamps; a press of the button ejects used ones. $10.55. Add a Kodak B-C Flashpack ($2.95 less batteries) and make it a battery condenser outfit, free from battery worries. If you use flash a lot, you want the Ektalux Flash System. For use with any camera, internally synchronized or with solenoid. With Extension units, fires up to 7 lamps. Ektalux Flasholder (above), from $29.75. Extension Units, $12.40.

For Showing . . .

Even if you already own a projector you will find plenty of use for a Kodaslide Table Viewer. Projector and screen are combined in a single compact unit, to give you brilliantly clear views of your color slides, enlarged to just the right degree for comfortable editing or for an intimate showing . . . without the need for rearranging furniture or room darkening. The Kodaslide Table Viewer, Model A (shown), includes a plunger-type slide changer and a slide holder with a capacity of 75 cardboard mounts. $97.50. In the Kodaslide Table Viewer 4X, slides are inserted individually from the side. $49.50.

For projection showings to larger groups, Kodak offers you a choice of three Kodaslide Projectors. The Kodaslide Merit Projector with Kodak Projection Ektanon $f/3.5$ Lens and 150-watt lamp. $26.10. Kodaslide Projector, Model 2A, with either a 5-inch Kodak Projection Ektanon $f/3.5$ Lens, $52.80, or a 7½-inch $f/4$ lens, $63.45. Kodaslide Projector, Master Model, for 300- to 1000-watt lamps and with a choice of 4 lenses for home or auditorium. Priced from $169 to $246.

For Enlarging . . .

There'll be plenty of wintertime pictures you'll want to enlarge. If you feel it's time for the best, you'll want a Kodak Flurolite Enlarger. Once you have handled its convenient controls, checked its deluxe features, you'll know you must have it. Cool, fluorescent light, in integrating sphere lamphouse, provides high printing brilliance, excellent contrast, easy focusing, minimizes negative grain. Two hand controls permit focusing and elevating at the same time. Rotating negative carrier tilts through 12 degrees for distortion control. Rigid tubular column, deep-anchored in sturdy steel cabinet base; cabinet is lighttight for handy paper storage. With accessories, Flurolite can be used as a view camera, for copying, slide-making, microfilming, photomicrography, and cinetitling. Price, with one negative carrier, without lens, $96.40. For a modest budget, pick the Kodak Hobbyist Enlarger. Has same type of light source, rotating negative carrier; knob locks head firmly in position. Price, with one negative carrier and 89mm. Kodak Enlarging Ektanon $f/6.3$ Lens, $42.40.

GOTTLIEB HAMPFLER, PPSA

Experts' Choices For Fine Prints

No. 1 of an informative series on how leading exhibitors choose papers to fit their salon aims

GOTTLIEB HAMPFLER'S "Pennsylvania Snowscape" has appeared in the Baltimore, Montreal, New York P.P.A., Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, PSA, Rochester, and Wilmington International Salons. The scene demanded a rich, full-scale print of delicate gradation and luminous image quality. To meet these requirements, Mr. Hampfler chose the most popular of all salon papers—Kodak Opal G, a fine-grained lustre surface on cream white stock.

He speaks of it as "the finest of media for my pictorial work—with characteristics I can always depend upon."

An experienced exhibitor, Mr. Hampfler prizes Kodak Opal Paper not only for its beautiful gradation and tonal richness, but also for its moderate speed which aids local printing control, its latitude in exposure and development for warmer or cooler tones, its responsiveness to toning, and its reliability.

KODAK OPAL'S superb quality and its thirteen combinations of stock tint and surface texture have won it top billing among exacting workers. To accommodate negatives of varying scale, the Kodak group of fine papers offers alternate choices. One tempting alternate is the new, high-speed, warm-black, variable-contrast Kodak Medalist Paper—available in three surfaces and four contrast grades. Each grade can be made to yield a softer or more contrasty print—simply by varying the ratio of exposure and development. Medalist is about six times as fast as Opal; its surfaces are F (glossy), G (fine-grained lustre), and J (smooth, high lustre). The small reproduction at right is from a print on Medalist F.

PURPOSE and preference both help determine the medium—and there are Kodak papers to meet every need. For "Full Sail" (to appear full-page later in this series), Bernard G. Silberstein chose Kodak Illustrators' Special—a fine reproduction paper. For huge prints, Kodak Mural R is a natural choice. For extra-fast production, Kodak Resisto Rapid N, which washes and dries in ten minutes. And for contact printing—each fine Kodak enlarging paper has a contact-paper counterpart.

Know your Kodak papers, for knowledge spells success. For fine exhibition enlargements, gift prints, home decoration—choose from warm-black Medalist and Platino, brown-black Opal, Ektalure G, and Illustrators' Special, and neutral-black Kodabromide. For special applications, Kodak Mural R, Resisto Rapid N, Opalure Print Film, Translite Paper. For contact prints, Kodak Azo, Velox, Resisto N, and others. Your Kodak dealer has full details.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY, ROCHESTER 4, N. Y

Outdoors PLUS Indoors
...no better time than wintertime for a movie-making start!

"White" Christmas, or "green" Christmas . . . whether you live in a land of snow-clad pines or rustling palms . . . there's no time like the holiday season to start a movie-making career. Outdoors—and indoors—this is the time for exciting camera action . . . in color or black-and-white. For indoor movies are every bit as easy and as certain as shots made in sunlight! Two inexpensive flood lamps—and the fine, fast lenses on Kodak movie cameras do the rest. Camera prices are now lower . . . and movie film costs are probably far less than you think. Get the full story . . . at your Kodak dealer's.

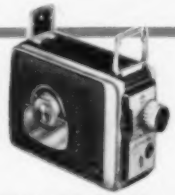
and Kodak Movie Cameras start at $43.30



BROWNIE MOVIE CAMERA

This is it! The new 8mm. Kodak Movie Camera that's capturing movie thrills for thousands of new movie makers . . . and with "Brownie" simplicity and economy. Its excellent f/2.7 Ektanon Lens is prefocused. You merely load (easy, sprocketless loading), check the built-in exposure guide, set the lens to follow accordingly, sight—shoot. Finger-tip exposure button locks so you can get in the picture, too. Has eye-level view finder, footage indicator. Weighs only 1¾ lbs. Makes fine movies—indoors or out, color or black-and-white—and only $43.30.

CINE-KODAK RELIANT CAMERAS

You can choose from either of two handsome 8mm. "Reliants." Both have four different speeds including slow motion! The f/2.7 model never needs focusing . . . and it's fast enough for most every lighting situation. The f/1.9 "Reliant" is twice-as-fast, focuses as close as 12 inches. Both models have sprocketless loading, enclosed eye-level view finder, exposure lock button, footage indicator, exposure guide—and accept a wide-angle converter plus accessory lenses. F/2.7 model, $82.30; f/1.9 model, $102.25.

CINE-KODAK MAGAZINE 8 CAMERAS

If you want the finest in the 8mm. movie field, one of these two great "Magazine 8's" is what you're looking for. Both cameras load in just 3 seconds—and you can switch film types . . . any time . . . without losing a frame. One model has a fine, prefocused f/2.7 13mm. Kodak Cine Ektanon Lens. The other model has an ultra-fast f/1.9 Kodak Cine Ektanon Lens focusing from 24 inches to infinity. Shooting speeds include slow motion. And there's a wide choice of accessory wide-angle and telephoto lenses. F/2.7 "Magazine 8," $124.15; f/1.9 model, $150.95.

FINAL SCORES FOR DRIVES OF CHAMPIONS

The following list shows the Grand Champion, District and Area Champions, and final score for each person participating in the drive.

The Committee wants to thank each person for his part in making the Drive of Champions a success. Now that we have found how easily we can enlist new members for PSA, let's go ahead just as we have in the past. Watch PSA JOURNAL for announcements about new awards for those who enlist new members.

Johnny Appleseed's Correspondence

Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR JOHNNY:

Ran across an article in PSA JOURNAL, February 1951 issue in which some mention was made of BC flash, permitting use of several bulbs and positive synchronization. Would you advise me which issues of PSA JOURNALS gave information on building this unit, also where I might contain information of Don Bennett's Flash-Pak?

If you were a user of 2¼ x 2¼ negatives (Rollie) and you were going to buy an enlarger, what would be your preference—semi-diffusion, double condensers, or diffusion—which would be considered best for salon work?

M. R. PRESTON

DEAR MR. PRESTON:

Contrary to original plans, we have devoted recent columns to items of more immediate and general interest than B-C flash. If you will write to

National Carbon Division
Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation
30 East 42nd Street
New York 17, New York

requesting Bulletin #5, I believe many of your questions on B-C flash will be answered.

You'll find information that should lead you to a safe decision on enlargers by studying columns 12 and 13 in the December 1950 and February 1951 JOURNALS. You'll probably conclude that a single condenser enlarger will best suit your purpose because it can be modified to give diffuse prints by using black tulle as described there. Watch your negative development when using a condenser enlarger.

Chicago, Illinois

DEAR JOHNNY:

I have taken a few shots of a favorite spot of mine to show the change of seasons. This is on Kodachrome film 828 size. One could be a salon shot I feel sure only—it should be in capital letters—ONLY it needs a figure in it.

In black and white this would be easy but color I don't know the best method. Can you help me?

Maybe some of your readers may be interested to know that if you use a sheet of projection paper in your camera in place of film the resultant paper negative will have less grain than making one in the usual manner. Of course, glossy paper is preferable. The exposure I find is 6 times greater than Verichrome film.

JOSEPH C. WELLS

DEAR MR. WELLS:

Have you tried double mounting to solve your problem? This can be done by exposing a piece of Kodachrome with the figure properly placed for your "only" shot. Use a light colored (preferably white) background for the figure, so the background won't interfere with your good shot. Light the figure the same way the original was lighted, that is, with the sun in the same position. Then mount the films, one over the other with each in the proper place. Study proportions too, so the figure will be the right size.

Possibly some member has a better idea.

JOHNNY APPLESEED, APSA

* * * * *

DEAR JOHNNY:

I followed your technic last summer of specializing on ortho (Verichrome) film entirely and with careful exposure using the latitude of Kodachrome. I developed in D-76—a three year old bottle—15 minutes at 75°. The contrast is beautiful. Nothing is blocked up, and the shadows have tone. The negatives are thin, have very little grain and print beautifully on normal paper.

I also shot a lot of Kodachrome with the warm-up filter, in fog and drizzling rain and by careful exposure and choice of color composition have a fine selection of slides with no blank skies but delicate gray and blue. I used exposure technic to underexpose by ½ stop.

PSA Directory

VOLUME 18 NUMBER 1

JANUARY 1952

THE PHOTOGRAPHIC SOCIETY OF AMERICA, INC.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

DIRECTORY OF MEMBERSHIP

This alphabetical list of members was prepared by PSA Headquarters as of November 1, 1951. Names and addresses are followed by a code indicating LIFE and CORNERSTONE MEMBERS, Divisional affiliation and month and year of joining PSA. When no Division letters appear, it means that Headquarters has no record of affiliation with a Division.

Every effort has been made to insure the accuracy of the listings, but your cooperation in checking your own name, address, and Division is earnestly requested. Errors can be corrected only with your help. Communications should be addressed to PSA Headquarters, 2005 Walnut Street, Philadelphia 3, Pennsylvania.

The code used is as follows:

†—Cornerstone Member	N—Nature Division
††—Life Member	J—Photo-Journalism Division
C—Color Division	P—Pictorial Division
M—Motion Picture Division	T—Technical Division

Because of space limitations, all miscellaneous memberships, subscriptions, etc., have been omitted.

Extra copies of this Directory Section, separately stapled, may be purchased by members only from PSA Headquarters, 2005 Walnut St., Philadelphia 3, Penna., at 25 cents each in coins or stamps only, payable with order.

Use of this Directory for sales solicitation is made without the approval or sanction either of PSA or of PSA JOURNAL. PSA Members are reminded that it is impossible to provide the convenience of a membership list without risking its use for sales or other commercial purposes. Such use constitutes no endorsement by PSA or by PSA JOURNAL of products or services thereby offered.

"Ten years ago America's Business publications . . ."

JOHN W. SNYDER
Secretary of the Treasury

"Ten years ago America's business publications, as a voluntary public service, presented for the first time advertisements outlining the Payroll Savings Plan for the regular purchase of U. S. Savings Bonds, and urged its acceptance. During the decade which has passed, American business has consistently supported the Payroll Savings Plan and made it a success. Continuation of this cooperation with the Treasury is most essential in the present emergency. Expanded sales of Defense Bonds will assist importantly in checking inflation, in preserving economic stability, and in furthering the over-all defense effort."

In ten brief years:

- From 700,000 in 1941 employee participation went to 27,000,000 at the peak of the war.
- Companies with Payroll Savings Plans jumped from 10,000 in 1941 to more than 175,000 during the war.
- Since January 1, 1951, the number of men and women on Payroll Savings has grown from 5,000,000 to 6,200,000.
- On September 30, 1951, individuals held Series E Bonds totaling $34.6 Billion—more than $4.6 Billion greater than on V-J Day.
- In the January-September, 1951, period, 33,418,000 $25 E Bonds were purchased—a gain of 17% over the same period of 1950. 8,966,000 $50 E Bonds were sold in the first nine months of 1951. $25 and $50 denominations are the bonds bought by Payroll Savers.

Congratulations to the executives of industry and the publishers of business papers for their continuing effort in promoting systematic savings through the Payroll Savings Plan—the plan that protects America and Americans.

The U. S. Government does not pay for this advertising. The Treasury Department thanks, for their patriotic donation, the Advertising Council and

NEW LOW PRICE!
KALART B-C FLASH UNIT WITH BUILT-IN TEST LIGHT
NOW $14.30 Complete

WHY is B-C the greatest improvement in flash photography since Kalart first invented the synchronizer? How does Kalart's exclusive built-in test light keep you from missing flash pictures?

This new Kalart B-C Demonstrator tells you — in a flash. Look for it at leading photo dealers. Try the test light yourself. Notice when you press down on it that it gives a brief flash. That tells you two important things. The battery is O.K. The flash lamp is O.K.

Think what it means to be able to check these two points instantly — before taking each flash picture. You save time, temper, and money. You stop missing flash pictures.

To get the full benefits of B-C flash photography, get a genuine Kalart — the only B-C flash equipment with built-in test light.

Kalart B-C flash units are available for cameras with or without built-in synchronization. For cameras with built-in sync, $14.30 complete. Series wired flash extension units, with 20 feet of rubber covered wire and spring clamp, $9.85 each.

Kodak VARI-BEAM LIGHTS

Kodak Vari-Beam Standlight $16.00

There are few indoor pictures that can't be lighted efficiently with the Kodak Vari-Beam Standlight and its companion, the Kodak Vari-Beam Clamplight.

In either, the light beam is completely adjustable, from broad beam to extra narrow beam, by a simple twist of the wrist. With such fine control you can bring out the desired texture, roundness, or modeling of any subject.

The big 12-inch reflectors, designed for No. 2 flood lamps, have a semi-matte, anodyzed aluminum surface. A round 4½-pound base on the Standlight gives ample stability, and a rubber rim prevents floor marring. The telescoping aluminum column is adjustable to heights from 3 to 5½ feet with a convenient thumbscrew to lock it in position. On the Clamplight is a C-type clamp that can be quickly attached to flat or tubular objects. Both have a handy, always-cool handle for aiming the lamp, and a clamping knob to hold it in position.

See the Kodak Vari-Beam lights at your Kodak dealer's. While there, ask also to see the Kodak Ektalux Flasholder.

Kodak Vari-Beam Clamplight $10.50

Vari-Beam collar permits selection of spot or flood or any intermediate light spread.

Kodak Ektalux Flasholder—$29.75 to $33.85—with accessories and extension units provides a B-C flash system for all professional flash requirements.

Prices are subject to change without notice.
